Local Authority and FEB
combine in environmental clean-up

The Greater Manchester Council specified Febtect decorative textured finish to be used to provide a harmonious blend of subtle shades to the soffits, balconies and corridors to their Hulme complex of flats—before treatment by FEB the complex was described as a 'monolithic mass of concrete'.

General view of Tinwell pumping station of the Welland and Nene River Division of the Anglian Water Authority. This station is one of three forming part of the Empingham pumped storage project in which water from the rivers Welland and Nene is pumped to a high level reservoir for storage purposes. This particular station contains identical 30/30-inch vertical-spindle close-coupled double-entry split-casing pumps.

The four pumps in the background lift water direct from the river Welland to the dam site whilst those in the foreground lift water pumped to Tinwell from the Wansford pumping station on the River Nene five miles away where there are identical Allen Gwynnes pumping sets.

ALLEN GWYNNES
PUMPS

The Empingham pumped-storage project; yet another outstanding example of the confidence placed in the reliability and efficiency of Allen Gwynnes pumps. A confidence earned from over 125 years' experience in the selection, design, construction and engineering of pumping projects.

Send your enquiry to Allen Gwynnes. Your requirement will be given individual attention.

The applications include:

- Waterworks
- Dock dewatering, impounding and floating docks
- Land drainage and irrigation
- Sewage treatment, disposal and storm-water pumping
- Power station condenser circulating water pumps and auxiliaries
- Dredging and solids handling
- Chemicals, petro-chemical and general industrial

"Let's decide this by a show of Handbooks"

When the Councillor's Handbook was first published in 1960 it was intended for the councillor new to local government. Before long however it was generally accepted as essential for all councillors new or experienced.

The current edition written by Professor J.D. Stewart, Associate Director of the Institute of Local Government Studies, University of Birmingham and John. K. Boynton, Chief Executive of Cheshire County Council is in constant demand.

Men and women seek election to local authorities for many different reasons. Some have political ambitions; some bring to bear business ability and professional skill; some are anxious to help the communities in which they live. Whatever the reason for election, the Councillor's Handbook will give an outline and guideline to the new councillor, and to the experienced, a greater awareness of the workings of his own authority.

The cost of the Councillor's Handbook is 75p per copy with bulk orders (40 or more) receiving 15% discount.

A man should see less of his secretary and more of his wife.

The time a secretary spends taking dictation is wasted time.

The time she spends deciphering her shorthand and correcting errors is wasted time.

Equally, time spent waiting for a secretary to dictate to is wasted time.

So is drafting in long-hand.

We hate waste.

No organisation should tolerate waste. This is what we at Dictaphone have done to eliminate it.

The Telecord system, designed and built by us, is a centralised dictating system. We plan a system to suit your particular needs, install it, and train your staff until they are completely at home with it.

It works very simply. Anyone requiring to dictate just picks up his phone and speaks. That's all. No longer do we have the wasteful 'Take a letter Miss Smith.' No fiddling with knobs or tapes. No hour is too late for Telecord dictation.

Any number of people can be connected into the system. Their voices are clearly recorded (none of the squawk of inadequate little recorders, and none of the consequent mistakes).

Because Telecord is a centralised system, it smooths out the day's work flow for both the dictator and the typist. It should even mean you get home to your wife a little earlier.

Free demonstration

Dictaphone make the most advanced office recording equipment in the world: a full range from pocket-sized electronic notebooks through desktop models, to the Thought Tank and a full centralised dictating system.

CORRELATION INDEX AND GUIDE TO FORMER LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Reorganization of local government and local authorities has spread over a period of ten years or more, commencing in Greater London in 1965. This index seeks to guide the reader, still familiar with town names, to the change of names of local authorities into which former authorities in England, Wales and Scotland (see note (ii) below) have been absorbed. Old names of local authorities can be found in column 1 and the corresponding entry in column 2 directs the reader to the present title listed in the preceding index of local authorities.

Column 1 contains the names of all former local authorities, with the type of authority identified by the following letters:-

CC	County Council	U	Urban District Council
CB	County Borough	R	Rural District Council
MB	Metropolitan Borough (former London area)	SB	Scottish City or Burgh
		SC	Scottish County Council
B	Borough Council

Column 2 contains present name of the district councils after reorganization, and particular types of new authorities (other than district councils in England) are noted by the letters:-

LB	London Borough	W	Welsh District
M	Metropolitan District	S	Scottish District

Column 3 contains names of the reorganized county or regional area. Particular types are noted by the letters:-

M	Metropolitan County (England)	SR	Scottish Region
SI	Scottish Islands Council

NOTES

(i) Some former authorities were absorbed into two or more new authorities in the several reorganizations, and are shown thus:-
Axbridge (Rural)—Sedgemoor/Mendip/Woodspring—Somerset/Avon.

(ii) This index is complete in relation to changes in England and Wales, but the changes in the former Scottish District Councils were too involved to compress into index form. Therefore, the correlation for Scotland, in this index, is restricted to former counties, cities and burghs.

EDITOR'S PREFACE TO THE 80th EDITION OF THE YEAR BOOK

In 1900 Robert Donald, founder and then editor of the Municipal Year Book, wrote: 'Every year the Municipal Year Book extends'. The 1977 edition is no exception and presents for the first time information and statistics on, inter alia, regional water authorities, civic theatres and consumer advice centres. It re-introduces museums and much sought after details of parish councils and meetings. These, and other first-time references to a number of government agencies and local authority associations, make the Municipal Year the most comprehensive directory of local government and public services in Great Britain.

Information in the Municipal Year Book is much sought after and its accuracy depends on returns from local authorities. In thanking all who have responded to my requests for information I am aware, as a local government officer myself for 43 years, of the understandable irritation often felt in completing returns for outside agencies. But, above all, I understand the outstanding need for information on local government. The Municipal Year Book will always give the answers to the first questions of an enquirer and, if required, will lead him further to sources of information. This year, for greater ease of use, the indexing has been concentrated in the earlier pages and is of a distinctive colour.

During the ten years of local government reorganisation—from 1965 in London to 1975 in Scotland—the work of my predecessor, Mr. W. A. Pullan, must be acknowledged for his replanning to ensure continuity of local government statistics. Throughout that period I served as a chief officer to a London Borough and thus had first-hand knowledge of the administrative problems of reorganisation. The question to be asked of any reorganisation is: will local government still be local? The next reorganisation is likely to be called 'devolution'; but will it be devolution to local government or to regional councils? As one who has seen local government lose so much in power and prestige, through the transfer of services, I wonder has the ratepayer to suffer further frustrations.

But, whatever happens, the Municipal Year Book will remain a book of reference and of changing history. Today, impartially, the Municipal Year Book records the political membership of each local authority. For each type of authority the political membership is summarised, enabling the reader to analyse the information in whatever form he pleases. But, although politics in local government is now a way and fact of life, the Municipal Year Book continues to respect the wishes of local councillors who desire to retain their distinction from party groups.

The changing face of local government has always been faithfully reported in the Municipal Year Book. In this, there is so much valuable assistance forthcoming from civil servants, Ministers of the Crown and—not least—from serving local government officers. To them all I express my sincere thanks.

As always, throughout the Municipal Year Book, every care has been taken to ensure accuracy, but neither publisher nor printer can admit liability for any loss incurred through misprint or other circumstances.

PREFACE

by The Rt. Hon. BRUCE MILLAN, MP
Secretary of State for Scotland

The paramount need to restrain capital and current expenditure made 1976 a painful time for us all. Unpleasant decisions had to be taken, although I am glad to say that the spirit of understanding in relations between local authorities and central government in Scotland is undiminished.

In a period of standstill, local government faces the problem of maintaining vital services with minimum loss of efficiency. But self-denial now will help to pave the way for economic recovery.

On the brighter side, we are poised to reap the rewards of the North Sea, with oil now coming ashore in increasing quantities. On land, the Government has tried to secure the right balance between conservation and development and our aim has been to see the planning system used constructively so that development takes place on the right sites and on the right scale. Given the extremely rapid pace of development, conflicts are inevitable but I think we have demonstrated that the British planning code has a crucial, creative part to play in the process. Indeed I believe that publication last year of Coastal Planning Guidelines helped greatly to reduce the number of cases of direct conflict and enabled all parties to adopt a positive approach.

Creating the essential infrastructure for North Sea development has been another of the Government's major priorities. North-east port facilities have been expanded, airport improvements are being carried out and the A9 is being substantially rebuilt to cater for the new growth. The housing problems caused by the influx of people to areas with small populations have also been tackled vigorously by the local authorities concerned.

As we emerge from recession, the modernisation and expansion of our industries is vital if Scotland is to take full advantage of the upswing. In this the Scottish Development Agency has a crucial part to play through its substantial powers of investment, its factory building and its responsibilities for environmental improvement. In the last sphere I have been encouraged to see the close co-ordination of the SDA's work with local authority strategies; and I am sure that these efforts will go a long way towards making Scotland a better place in which to live and work. One of the most exciting current developments in this field is the major programme for renewal in the east end of Glasgow, bringing together the Scottish Office, the two local authorities, the SDA and the SSHA on a co-operative project.

The past year has also seen the birth of the first community councils. It will take time for these new bodies to find their feet but I am confident that they will become effective bodies for the discussion of community problems and for the communication of views to public authorities. The Commissioner for Local Administration started work to investigate complaints of maladministration against local authorities.

At national level, the Government fully recognises the desire of the Scottish people for more control over their own affairs. Our response has been the White Paper "Our Changing Democracy", in which we proposed an imaginative and generous measure of legislative and executive devolution and I was most grateful for the detailed and thorough comments on our scheme that we received from local authorities.

Bruce Millan

REFACE

y The Rt. Hon. PETER SHORE, MP
ecretary of State for the Environment

The links between central and local government are close and important. My epartment in particular needs to maintain the closest of contacts with local governent. I am glad to say that despite all the difficulties which have beset us in the st year and despite the differences of opinion which inevitably arise from time to ne the process of discussion, consultation and negotiation goes on in a spirit of utual respect and co-operation. I greatly value the closeness of this relationship. In rticular, I would like to pay tribute to the Consultative Council on Local Governent Finance which has done a great deal in recent times to increase understanding between central and local government.

The economic crisis has forced unpalatable decisions on us all, and there is no mediate prospect of easier times. In his preface to the 1976 Year Book, Anthony osland remarked that the outlook for local authority expenditure was "far from ght". Some authorities may feel that this has turned out to be something of an derstatement.

Nevertheless, I think that most authorities would agree that local government nnot expect to be free from the restrictions faced by the whole country, and must ar their fair share of the essential reductions in public spending designed to sure the modernisation and expansion of manufacturing industry upon which ure prosperity depends. Nor do I think that the process of examination of orities for expenditure can be anything but healthy. It is essential that stringent onomy continues to be exercised, and I recognise the very considerable efforts which local authorities have been making to do so.

Looking beyond the immediate situation, a number of very important policy eas are under fundamental review. The Layfield Committee of Inquiry into Local Government Finance have given us a wide ranging report which raises basic issues not only about the financial machinery, but also about the whole relationship between central and local government. On these, we are seeking the views of interested parties, and of local government in particular.

Another matter of special importance against the background of the present drought on which the views of local government are being sought, is on the Government's Review of the Water Industry in England and Wales. The consultation paper, published in March 1976, raised a number of issues, affecting both the central structure of the water industry and its constitution, and also relationships and operations at regional and local level—where local government interests are most crucially affected. At the time of going to press the very full response we have had to the review was still being analysed. We are grateful for the helpfully detailed observations, many from local authorities, which have been submitted.

By the time this Year Book is published legislation for the devolution of powers to Scotland and Wales should be before Parliament and the Government expect to have published a consultation document on England. This subject is one on which the views of local government will be of particular significance. In addition, the review of housing policy which has been carried out in the Department will also be subject to consultation.

The consultation process will continue and will grow. It is in my view an enduring component of modern democratic government. I hope that during 1977 the frequent and close contact between central and local government will continue to evolve and develop, for the ultimate benefit of the people we are trying to serve.

Peter Shore

PREFACE

By the Rt. Hon. JOHN MORRIS, QC, MP
Secretary of State for Wales

The year that has passed since I last had the pleasure of introducing the Municipal Year Book has not been an easy one for local authorities or central government.

Economic circumstances have required the imposition of still greater constraints on both central and local government spending and it is clear that financial restrictions will need to be continued for some time. The vital need for local authority expenditure to be kept within the target set by the Government has required all local authorities to take difficult decisions on priorities between services, all of which are desirable in themselves. This is a painful exercise for members and officers of local authorities dedicated to providing for the needs of the communities they serve. We have all felt the strain but local authorities have responded to the needs of the situation in their usual responsible manner. Our prime objective for the coming year must remain to defeat inflation.

But whatever the difficulties we face, the stronger links we have forged with the local authority associations through the Consultative Councils on Local Government Finance have, proved of immense value. Our regular meetings provide an invaluable forum for the exchange of views and ideas. If the Government and the Associations have not always been able to agree on the best way to tackle a problem, at least the Councils provide the means for ensuring a comprehensive understanding and appreciation of the others point of view. I hope the closer relationship of central and local government policy formation which, has been a feature of our joint endeavours over the last year, will, continue to grow to our mutual advantage.

THE ROYAL INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

The Royal Institute of Public Administration, which was founded in 1922, is an educational trust whose objects are to advance the study and to improve the practice of public administration. During the last 25 years it has been particularly active in carrying out work of special interest to local authorities. This it has done in a variety of ways.

The Institute's U.K. Training Services provide a wide range of courses designed to meet the current needs of local authorities. These are supplemented by conferences and seminars on specialized subjects and by 'in-authority' training where courses are designed for the staff of individual authorities. Over many years the Institute has published articles in its quarterly journal, Public Administration, on local government subjects, and has undertaken major research projects on matters of vital interest to local authorities. These have resulted in standard books. More recently it has embarked on a series of short studies on administrative topics of current significance.

A major feature has been the work of the Local Government Operational Research Unit which has helped to develop advanced administrative techniques for local authorities on a wide range of their services. The Unit's work has been concerned with policy formation as well as with the more efficient execution of well-established tasks. New activities stemming from the work of the Local Government Operational Research Unit are computer assisted timetabling for schools, and the recently formed Unit for Retail Planning Information which has been located near to the Local Government Operational Research Unit and will work closely with it.

Other major elements in the Institute's work are an Operational Research Group working for the National Health Service and an Overseas Services Unit which provides consultancy and training services for countries in the developing world and for international organizations.

Director General: Raymond Nottage, CMG, Hamilton House, Mabledon Pl, London, WC1H 9BD (01-388 0211).

THE INSTITUTE OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATORS

The Institute of Local Government Administrators was founded in 1958. It serves the professional interests of qualified administrative officers in the local government service.

The most important aims of the Institute are threefold:

1. To raise the standard of administrative and management practice in local government.
2. To promote the study of local government administration and management.
3. To improve the professional status of administrative officers in local government.

From its inception the Institute has been conscious that if the status of the qualified administrator is to be improved, it must encourage the systematic study of training in administration and management. Adequate career prospects must be ensured and the qualified administrator afforded equal recognition as a professional officer with his lawyer, accountant, engineer and architect colleagues.

A full member of the Institute must be 25 or over and satisfy the bye-laws on training and experience gained over four years in the local government service. He should also be employed in a senior administrative capacity. In addition the possession of a degree of a British University, or an appropriate administrative qualification is necessary. A suitable professional examination qualification may also be accepted.

Associate Membership is offered to officers who have obtained a recognized administrative qualification or who hold a degree of a British University. Student Membership is available to local government officers studying for a recognized administrative qualification.

Fellowships are awarded for outstanding service to the Institute or to local government.

In recent years ILGA, as the Institute is more usually known, has published several important reports aimed at defining the training required by administrators. Two 'Desk Topic' handbooks' Relationships in the Office' and 'Recruitment Interviewing' have been published and a third is being prepared.

Evidence has been submitted to the Maud and Mallaby Committees, to the Royal Commission on Local Government and to the Bains Working Group on Local Authority Management Structures. In addition the views of ILGA have been sought on the recommendations of the Prime Minister's Committee on Local Government Rules of Conduct and by the Layfield Committee on Local Government Finance.

Government Departments and other bodies consult the Institute because they recognize that it represents nearly 2,000 officers with special knowledge and experience.

The Institute's President is J. Greenwell, MA, FILGA, Chief Executive Northamptonshire County Council; the Chairman of the Council is J. Cowdall, DMA, FILGA, Chief Executive, West Lancashire District Council.

Secretary: Brian Gleave, DMA, FILGA, 127 Lexden Rd., Colchester, CO3 3RJ (0206 45212).

Director

Organization

LAMSAC was established in 1968 by the associations of local and river authorities in England, Scotland and Wales to help and advise their members on the introduction and use of management services and computers. Its aims and objectives are as follows:

"To initiate and guide the direction of the future research into and development of management services and computer uses likely to be of benefit to local government; to stimulate and co-ordinate co-operative enterprise and research in these fields and to advise the constituent bodies on what financial assistance should be afforded from public funds in support of research and development programmes.

To plan training courses, study groups and conferences to meet the needs of local government for the wider understanding and use of management services and computers in collaboration with the Local Government Training Board and to organize activities in these fields in co-operation with other existing agencies.

To maintain contact with government departments, at Ministerial and other levels, and with non-government specialist agencies concerned with the development of management services and use of computers, and with universities and other bodies concerned with research related to the subject.

To advise the constituent bodies on major matters of policy affecting local government generally as the result of the development of management services and computers.

To advise member authorities of the constituent bodies on management services and computer matters and where appropriate to make charges to such authorities for specific services provided.

To collect and disseminate amongst the constituent bodies and their member authorities information relating to management services and computers and to co-ordinate publication of the work of local government in this field".

Since the re-organization of local government LAMSAC's activities have extended into the wider fields of general management procedures and techniques. Typical of the projects now being undertaken are performance review, corporate planning and management information requirements.

Research and Development

LAMSAC is continuing its policy of undertaking and commissioning research and development projects which will be beneficial to local government as a whole. Increasingly the projects are being carried out jointly between LAMSAC and Central Government departments.

Examples of such projects have been the review of local authority management information systems and the development of a computerised housing management system. Other projects have included the establishment of an advisory unit on computer aided building design, the development of computer systems for police forces, and a study of waste recovery methods and possibilities.

The Panels

A major part of the research carried out by LAMSAC is undertaken by the Computer Panel, the O & M and Productivity Panel and the General Management Panel and their applications groups and working parties. These bodies are composed in the main of experienced local government officers who serve voluntarily. The results of these studies are normally published as LAMSAC reports of which over fifty are now in print. Copies of all these are available from LAMSAC at 3 Buckingham Gate, London, SW1E 6JH. Examples of recent publications include:

Stock Control.
Computers and Housing Maintenance.
Performance Review Guidelines.
Fire Service Mobilisation and Control by Computer.
An Information System for Trading Standards and Consumer Services.

About thirty applications groups and working parties are usually in existence at any time, applications groups usually as semi-permanent creatures of the Computer Panel, and working parties set up by all three panels to carry out specific tasks.

Consultancy Service

The role of the consultancy service is to provide support for management in addition to that provided locally. While the basic concept is that LAMSAC can provide a more economical service by employing highly qualified and experienced consultants in those special skills which it would be unproductive for authorities to recruit as permanent staff, the LAMSAC service is also geared to providing a total management support service where this is required. The consultancy service is composed of officers with many years management experience and has practical knowledge of the difficulties which face authorities.

The close contact which LAMSAC maintains with all authorities coupled with the advice given by local officers who serve on the many LAMSAC working parties and panels keeps the consultancy service in touch with trends and needs. Special consideration is therefore continuously given to ensuring that the service has the necessary knowledge to assist authorities in solving new problems.

The consultancy service has a background of solid achievement not only in all aspects of management and its attendant problems, but also in post re-organization difficulties. The following are some of the areas where LAMSAC has assisted authorities:

General

LAMSAC has continued to organize general appreciation and specialist training courses on management and computer topics, including "On-premises" courses run for individual authorities. Many thousands of members and officers have attended these courses on subjects as varied as work study, project co-ordination, corporate planning and computer applications for engineers and librarians.

Co-operation with other organizations both inside and outside local government has continued, especially in the field of computers. The Central and Local Government ADP Consultative Committee provides a forum for representatives of central and local government to meet and discuss common problems and developments concerning the use of computers. Meetings are held regularly with the computer manufacturers, to ensure that local government views are adequately represented.

In the way of overseas connections, LAMSAC has undertaken work for the Council of Europe and is represented on a working party examining computer usage in local authorities in countries throughout Europe. Many overseas contacts have been made through the British Council and the World Health Organization, and delegates from various countries have visited LAMSAC; amongst the most recent were officials and students from Japan, Hungary, Nigeria and Australia.

Local authorities are becoming more sophisticated in management procedures and in the use of management sciences and computers, and LAMSAC is developing its own capabilities in order to continue to give guidance and assistance to authorities. Computer applications which were undreamt of five years ago are now under development or in operation. The use of corporate management techniques is providing opportunities for increased service to the public with better use of the resources available.

In order to give greater assistance to local authorities LAMSAC has, as well as its headquarters at 3 Buckingham Gate, London, SW1E 6JH (Tel: 01-828 2333), eleven regional offices in five divisions as follows:

THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT OPERATIONAL RESEARCH UNIT

Review by B. WHITWORTH, BA

Director, Local Government Operational Research Unit, Royal Institute of Public Administration

As its name implies, the Local Government Operational Research Unit uses operational research methods to solve problems in local government. Operational research is a systematic and rational approach to decision making in management and policy formulation. It proceeds by expressing problems in quantitative terms and using analytic methods to evaluate the alternative solutions.

In the eleven years since it was set up, the Unit has grown from six to sixty staff, two-thirds of whom are graduates, mainly in statistics and the quantitative sciences. Its budget this year is about £400,000. It has offices in Reading and Manchester, the former housing the Southern Group, and the latter housing the Northern Group.

The Unit is supported by the subscriptions of its member authorities—currently consisting of well over half the metropolitan councils and county councils in the U.K.—and by a proportionate grant from the Department of the Environment. These enable the Unit to carry out a research programme independent of specifically negotiated projects for local authorities. Research projects for individual authorities are normally undertaken under contract, with more favourable terms available to members. The contract research programme is primarily determined by the demands of local authorities, although appropriate central government departments often assist in such projects. The content of the non-contract research programme is decided by the Unit's Board, whose members are representative of the major local authority associations. Additional suggestions for such research are always welcomed.

The Unit has now reached a stage in its development where it has built up considerable expertise in a number of areas. In the course of studies for authorities in all parts of the country it has extended and developed basic methods of meeting many different situations. Methods that have been widely applied include land-use planning procedures, location of local authority offices, housing survey and analysis, pupil forecasting, refuse disposal planning, prediction of social services demand, and a wide variety of transportation planning techniques from road and traffic evaluation to bus scheduling.

Local Government Studies

Several studies for the new local authorities have been completed. These include:

1. Transport—two studies, one for a metropolitan county to examine the short- and medium-term possibilities for bus transport in an urban area using a sophisticated public transport model developed by the Unit, and the other for a shire county to develop a county-wide travel demand model for use in analysing the transport implications of alternative structure plans.
2. Planning—a study to apply the Unit's Hierarchical Activity Allocation Model to the planning of residential location in a county area. The model takes into account a range of interrelated factors, including employment opportunities, shopping facilities, transport arrangements, etc.
3. Waste Disposal—studies to determine the best long-term waste disposal strategy for their areas for several new waste disposal authorities. A feature of this work has been an extensive investigation of the industrial wastes arising in each area.
4. Offices—several studies for new county councils and new district councils to investigate the best use of inherited accommodation and, if one is being considered, the location of a new council headquarters.
5. Housing—studies for three district authorities facing slightly different housing problems. The aim of the Unit's work is to identify the underlying trends in supply and demand for housing in each area, and their inter-relationships, so that the council can use this information in determining and evaluating the impact of alternative housing policies.

6. Vehicle Management—a study to determine the best location for a centralized vehicle depot following the amalgamation of several former authorities each with its own facilities. The study also examined related factors such as the rationalization of vehicle maintenance and replacement policies.
7. Supplies—a study to investigate ways of streamlining stores purchasing procedures in a district authority's housing stores.

Central Government Studies

The Unit's work for central government has covered a range of topics. These include work for the Home Office and the Department of the Environment.

For the Home Office, the Unit has been involved in a wide-scale programme to test and develop two fire cover models developed by the Scientific Advisory Branch. Some dozen fire brigades have co-operated in this work and the Unit has co-ordinated and controlled the computer applications and analysis of results for each area.

The Department of the Environment has continued to sponsor research and development work in transportation and land-use planning. In planning, for example, a programme of research has recently been undertaken to develop a method of taking into account the interaction between transport, housebuilding, recreation, shopping, etc. in preparing structure and local plans.

Research Studies

The Unit has financed several studies on topics of general interest to local authorities. Notable among these are an evaluation of the costs and benefits of free public transport, the development of a computer method of assessing the demand for alternative rural transport schemes, and further work on the cluster analysis method of predicting demand for social services.

Services to Local Authorities

Services available to member authorities of the Unit range from free copies of reports on all completed studies to advice and assistance on specific problems a department may wish to discuss.

In addition, the Unit has in the course of its work gained considerable expertise in a variety of statistical and analytical methods and is continuing to develop this aspect of its work. In the normal course of its studies it makes considerable use of methods such as cost-benefit analysis, discounted cash flow and network analysis. More recently it has developed its skills in the design, execution and analysis of surveys, which have been a vital part of recent transport, refuse, housing, office accommodation and social services projects. Specialist advice on these topics can be made available to member authorities.

Brief details of current and completed projects are published annually in the Information Bulletin, which is freely available from the Publications Officer at either of the addresses below. More detailed reports on specific aspects of the Unit's work are listed in the Bulletin.

ORGANIZATION AND METHODS

Deputy Director-General, Royal Institute of Public Administration

The term and the practice of Organisation and Methods have to some extent been eclipsed by the special jargon and multi-professional development of management services. Just as time and motion study, ADP and management analysis have become part of management history so O & M has been taken for granted in an age of sophisticated systems, electronics and organisation development. The O & M practitioner of ten years ago who was largely concerned with departmental reviews with forms design and office management has been replaced by a more complex dynamic trouble-shooter. The management services officer today, although trained in O & M techniques is a consultant to his management on a wide variety of topics, he is the resource for management and communications research—the vanguard of reform and scientific administration. For many local authorities O & M teams have done a great deal to assist with the problems of the 1974 re-organisation of local government services and the consequential re-deployment of professional and support staff. They still have a vital and continuing role to play but to be effective it will mean the selection of first class officers for O & M duties. In fact the standard today is already much higher than was the case ten years ago and as a consequence councillors and chief officers are expecting a high standard of advice on management matters.

What is O & M?

Whatever the management setting O & M is generally accepted as a well-established, logical and step-by-step technique that was developed by common sense and the careful analysis of factual information. Essentially the procedure involves detailed fact-finding and recording that is based on observation, interviews and the systematic collection of relative documents. These are recorded as notes charts or diagrams on which are based the more difficult stage of analysis. Then should emerge draft solutions to problems or alternative methods. These are discussed with management and with staff representatives before becoming part of a report. This report, which should leave out minor matters agreed at the discussion stage, becomes the blue print for subsequent implementation by management. Some assistance may be given by the O & M team with the implementation of the report since they will have studied the problem in depth but the responsibility for implementation still remains with management. The success of an O & M team must in the end be measured by the proportion of recommendations accepted and the cost of that acceptance.

O & M Staff

Staff may be professionals and consultants employed on this type of work for long periods of their careers. Others may be employed on O & M duties for say 5 or 6 years before moving back into line management or to a senior administrative or professional post. In any event all O & M practitioners need to be acceptable to all ranks, intelligent, polite and have analytical ability. They should be good interviewers, be able to write clear reports and competent to describe new concepts to top management clearly and quickly. They should be reasonably numerate, possess a degree of humility and a realistic measure of imagination.

Employment on this type of work offers rare opportunity for career development and the period of service should in no way handicap the individual as far as normal progress or promotion are concerned. Provided conditions are honoured selection becomes fairly easy as so many able officers are then likely to seek employment in this capacity since the work will help to develop their managerial potential and offer them some exceptional opportunities for demonstrating their latent abilities.

Training for O & M

Many organisations offer training and there is very little difference in the syllabus coverage. Theory is fairly easily taught but since O & M is an essentially practical subject class-room or book learning is never enough. Practical exercises and experience in the field under supervision are vital aspects of training. The theory may be offered in modules spaced by some planned practical experiences. Formal training may take 8–10 weeks but in addition at least 6 months practical experience under a tutor should be scheduled before O & M officers operate on their own.

Essential subjects include:

The O & M Technique
Management Theory
Principles of Organization
Report writing
Interviewing Techniques
Forms Design
Office Machines
Sampling Techniques

Work Management (Clerical & Manual)
Office Layout
Group Behaviour
Method Analysis
Filing and Registry Procedures
Trade Union Attitudes to Management Services

Problems of Selling Recommendations

In addition some general understanding of allied techniques such as operational research, systems analysis and job evaluation should be gained—perhaps in a later training module. Since personnel are likely to be affected and sometimes re-deployed as a result of assignments it is desirable that all O & M practitioners should have some idea of staff attitudes and training techniques that might be used to assist staff transferred to different duties.

O & M and Personnel Administration

Whatever work is undertaken by O & M teams some impact on staff in the department under review is unavoidable. The O & M officer must therefore be aware of ranks, grades, the work of staff associations and professional bodies. All interviews are likely to disturb officials working in the section under review and care to avoid rumours of redundancies, transfers or the imposition of additional duties must be anticipated. This means that the closest possible liaison between the Personnel or Establishment Department and O & M must be maintained.

Both may answer to the same chief or committee. In some authorities they may be separate. In either case each service must make the other fully aware of assignments in hand and of any recommendations affecting staff. Failure to recognize the responsibilities of the personnel department by O & M and the impact of O & M recommendations affecting staff will be disastrous and destroy the credibility of the O & M technique.

On the other hand it will be a foolish personnel section that ignored O & M recommendations concerning staff numbers or changes in staff ratio or service conditions.

External O & M Consultant

Not every local authority will feel justified in employing its own fulltime O & M team. When the need arises they may either wish to use a neighbouring county's management services team on a time-cost basis or turn to the services offered by management consultants. Both LAMSAC (see Review in this volume) and the Management Consultants Association, 23–24 Cromwell Place, London SW7 would be able to advise on this problem. Management Consultants charges are at present something like £700 per consultant week and may appear to be high. One should realize however that the reputable firms are backed by wide experience and sound research. External advice has the advantage of visible objectivity and consultant firms may be well placed to deal with organizational problems involving committees or political considerations. They are not of course so familiar with the local problems or personality considerations but offset their lack of local knowledge with a mass of experience gained by studying similar problems in other organizations including other public authorities. The external consultant may not always be so available during the implementation stages and for some assignments this may be an important factor when selecting O & M services. Another use of the external consultant, or O & M team from another public authority is to supplement one's own team when either the size of the team or technical nature of the problem is beyond the scope of the local unit.

Internal and external practitioners can usefully work in partnership and together get results that top management could never find time to work on even if they had the particular experience required to solve the problems. Improvement in methods or re-organization often saves money but it is unwise to over-emphasise the purely financial aspect of O & M work.

By all means check results in money terms but from the public and staff relations viewpoint such economies resulting should be put in perspective with improved services foremost in mind.

The next Decade

In local government the career O & M practitioner is likely to be available for some years ahead. He will more and more become part of a comprehensive management services team working closely with colleagues trained in work study, personnel techniques, computer services and other specialities. He will expect to rise to high rank in this role and with local authorities now employing considerable numbers of staff the O & M teams in larger areas may need to be quite large and provide within the team suitable opportunity for promotion and career satisfaction. Sheer logic and realism should ensure a place for steam O & M in a decade that will also produce infinite management techniques and many forms of electronic development. There will always be problems that management has insufficient time to solve, and for a chief officer to have a task force capable of tackling those problems should enable the top professionals to spend more time on work for which they have been trained. The present measures taken to offset inflation will, one could hope give way to another period of service expansion and the development of corporate management. It is then that modern O & M personnel should be given opportunity for imaginative and constructive work and research into new management techniques.

WORK STUDY DEVELOPMENTS IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Review by K. W. FEAR, MBIM, FWSOM

Director of U.K. Training Services, Royal Institute of Public Administration

The problems of productivity have been raised in more than one quarter during the year and in some ways it has become a pivot point around which most of current Work Study training revolves.

POLICY

1. It is believed by some that the Employers would do well to accept reiterate and implement the following policy using the terms current and potential productivity.

(a) Pay should continue to be linked with productivity

(b) Maximum current productivity which means maximum use of all resources, cannot be achieved without pre-programming based upon sound work standards

(c) Maximum rate of improvement in potential productivity can only be achieved by continual and formal review of working methods.

PRODUCTIVITY MODEL

2. It seems therefore that the following model of productivity control should be recognised:

(a) The Corporate Plan indicates the activities that are to be carried out, quantified in regard to manpower using work standards

(b) Work in each department is programmed for a defined period (weekly where possible) using work standards as a basis. This helps to eliminate delays and thus keeps Current Productivity at a high level

(c) Each department s programme achievement is monitored and the reasons for poor performance are investigated

(d) Programme achievement is used as a determinant of earnings levels for manual workers, tradesmen and supervisors. (Other appropriate factors will be used also)

(e) Each department reviews its working methods for significant tasks on a continuing basis in order to improve potential productivity. Improvement proposals are included in the annual budget submissions, and work standards are changed when the improvements are implemented.

3. Agreement on these lines would call for an extension or readjustment of some current thinking in the following respects:

(a) The search for the most economical methods should be a continuing one and done on a formal basis following the philosophy of potential productivity. This is seldom done at present

(b) Measurement of time is the basis of programming without which current productivity cannot be maximised. Programming is seldom done in this way at present

(c) Despite the difficulties and subjective basis of measurement in management, supervisory, professional and administrative work measurement of some kind (for which there are accepted techniques) is essential as a basis for budgeting and programming. This is seldom done at present

(d) The reason that problems arise when measurement is converted into incentive bonus is that often neither the work nor the measurement are under control. This is often the situation at present

(e) It is not difficult to pin down and accommodate small method changes if this is done as a definite planned policy within a formal potential productivity improvement programme. This is seldom done at present

(f) In the main, the availability of work in local government is not limitless, so the drive of the payment scheme should not be towards maximum output but towards completion of the programme. Conventional payment by results schemes in local government encourage wrong aims

(g) If the current pay policy appears to have brought Work Study activity to a standstill. Work Study is being used almost entirely as the basis for payment schemes rather than as a basis for productivity control and improvement.

PAY

4. The problem in using current productivity achievement as a determinant of earnings levels lies in the sanctions that can be applied. If no sanctions can be applied there is little point in pretending that a variable bonus can ever vary downwards: in such a case a fixed wage, varying only with total working hours, would be appropriate. But it seems unlikely that the Employers would accept the notion of an incentive scheme without sanctions, for it would then not be an incentive scheme. If the earnings are to vary with achievement it would be better to retain the bonus element, which could then vary or be withheld in accordance with the terms of the scheme.

5. If it is accepted, as argued in para 3. (f) above, that conventional PBR schemes are seldom appropriate in local government, the alternative that best fits the requirement set out in para 4. above is Measured Daywork. This could have either a fixed bonus, which is withheld if achievement fails to qualify, or a variable bonus in accordance with previously contracted performance (graded MDW). But the essential feature is pre-programming: in view of some Unions' declared understanding of MDW (i.e. no programming, no control, no sanctions, no measurement) it might be better to avoid this term.

6. The above proposals would, when implemented, remove some of the more wildly fluctuating PBR schemes from the scene, but the problem of motivation would become more important, as has been pointed out. There seems to be therefore not only an urgent need to change supervisory attitudes and practice by training, but also some merit in considering the introduction of multi-factor incentive schemes for supervisors.

7. Paras 4–6 above recommend the use of current productivity performance as a determinant of earnings. Method improvements from the potential productivity routine (para 2. (e) above) would not bring increased earnings, because work standards would be changed when the revised methods were introduced: this is a frequent bone of contention. Clearly method improvements could be used as a basis for increased bonus payments, either wholly or partly to the group concerned (where they give an incentive to participation, inventiveness and enthusiasm), or as an overall Authority increase. From a parochial viewpoint this idea is attractive, but of course it could bring problems between neighbouring Authorities, offering greater potential to those who start off from a position of relative inefficiency.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT TRAINING BOARD

Review by D. LOFTS, MA, DPA, Director

Introduction

Economic and political pressures have combined and intensified to restrain local government's manpower and financial resources during the past year. This trend is likely to continue for the foreseeable future. It will exacerbate the difficulties posed to local authorities by reorganization, wage inflation, high interest rates and a spate of legislation which has imposed new responsibilities on local government. All these factors reinforce the major contribution which training can make to the better use of resources.

The Government has made it clear that public expenditure (and the public sector labour force) must be held back so as to increase the resources available to industry and commerce. Local government itself has responded fully to the country's difficulties and reviewed its plans so as to contain its demands. In this situation an improved use of manpower is one of the few ways in which local authorities can maintain their services at an acceptable level. This was the keynote of the advice given by the Training Board to all local authorities late in 1975 in which they were encouraged to review their training programmes and maximize the contribution which training can make to efficiency.

Training in local authorities

Considerable progress has been made in recent years in developing a body of training expertise in local government, both in the local authorities and within the Training Board. There are now few of the larger local authorities without professional training staff, and at 31 March 1975 over 600 training personnel employed by local authorities were registered with the Training Board for the purpose of securing support from the Training Board for their own training and development.

When the Board came into existence in 1967, most of the training effort in local government was concentrated on encouraging staff to prepare for recognized qualifications, especially professional qualifications; other forms of training were little developed. Whilst the Board has encouraged qualification training—and it remains important—a significant start has been made in identifying other training needs and encouraging and assisting local authorities to meet these.

Some of the major categories of training which have been developed are – management training, training in supervision, training in personnel work, and some substantial and large scale new basic training schemes for manual workers, especially in the maintenance and construction of roads and in the parks and playing fields service. By 31 March 1975, over 50 local authority training centres were receiving grant aid from the Board for the training of roadworkers and parks and playing fields staff and for driver training for heavy goods vehicles. In the training of roadworkers, the great majority of the country is now covered by these centres, and an encouraging start has also been made in the parks and playing fields sector.

The Board's training activities

A significant development during the past two years has been the formalizing and extension of the Board's consultations with interested parties when planning its future work programme. This reflects the desire of the Board to utilize its limited resources to maximum effect. Every local authority chief executive now receives up-dating information about the Board's work and, in February of each year, is invited to comment on such things as occupations and general work areas in which he would like the Board to operate and on ways in which the Board might help to meet local needs. These comments, together with the views of provincial councils, professional bodies and organizations represented on the Board, enable the Board to plan its work to maximize its own contribution.

An important change during 1975/6 was the creation of a new Board committee, the Careers Service Training Committee, to take over the responsibilities of the former Youth Employment Service Training Board. The importance of this key area has been reinforced by financial support from the Department of Employment to encourage the expansion and strengthening of the careers service. Two developments concerned with examinations conducted by the Board merit special mention. The regulations for the Diploma in Municipal Administration have been amended to allow local government administrators to obtain this career qualification on a day-release basis. This was done to ensure that the DMA (new regulations) maintains its increasing attraction as a realistic qualification during the current financial and staffing constraints. The new Diploma in Trading Standards, a block-release based qualification spread over three years of study, will be offered from September 1976 at three centres South Western Provincial Council; Hollings College, Manchester; and South Thames College, Wandsworth. The new DTS has been accepted by the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection as covering all requirements of the statutory examination as set out in the Weights and Measures Act 1963, and the present statutory qualification leading to certification is to be phased out, probably in 1979. The new qualification has been developed from one of the proposals in the Board's Training Recommendation No. 18, Inspectors of Weights and Measures. This suggested that there was a need for a comprehensive qualification, taking account of the total requirements of the new trading standards department and administered by a body representative of local government, central government and the professional body, the Institute of Trading Standards Administration.

Other major developments in the past year (full details of which can be found in the Board's Report) included the publication of supplements to training recommendations dealing with management development in education departments, the implications of the Health and Safety at Work Act, on-the-job training of parks and playing field employees and roadmen, and instructor training. A new recommendation on the training of pest control personnel was published and 1976 will see the production of Training Recommendation No. 21 which is concerned with public lighting employees.

In 1976/7, the Board will begin a major review of local government's management development activities and will also be looking at the present pattern of training for environmental health staff and building control officers.

Training grants

Although the Board no longer operates a levy system, its budget enables it to offer a limited range of grants to local authorities to support their training activities. For 1976/7, grant aid will continue on much the same lines as for 1975/6 – that is, to encourage the training of training staff and to support the establishment of training centres for manual worker training in the parks and playing fields, roadworkers and HGV driver categories. In addition, the Board is operating a special grants scheme to expand the provision of apprenticeship training facilities for building craftsmen with funds provided by both the Training Services Agency and the Board.

Chairmanship of the Board

No review of 1975 would be complete without reference to the retirement of Lord Morris of Grasmere, who had been Chairman of the Board since its establishment in 1967. He took a deep personal interest in the Board's work and exercised a major influence on its strategy. Both local government and the Board will for long remain in his debt for his major contribution. Lord Morris was succeeded as Chairman by Lord Greenwood of Rossendale, who is well-known in local government for his many services.

Conclusion

Further details of the items mentioned in this survey will be found in the Board's Annual Reports. The Board's address is No. 8 The Arndale Centre, Luton, LU1 2TS, Beds. Telephone 0582 21111.

Foreword by THE RT. HON. T. F. PEART, MP
Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

Animal Health

Events during 1975 and 1976 provide excellent illustrations of how local authorities, through their diseases of animals inspectors, have made a notable contribution towards the control and eradication of animal diseases. Through their co-operation in the administration of the Movement and Sale of Pigs Order 1975 and the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973 we have been able to get on top of swine vesicular disease which was first confirmed in Great Britain on 11 December 1972. The peak year for the disease was 1974 when there were 187 outbreaks. In 1975 there were only 45 outbreaks with the last occurring on 9 September in that year; up to 31 March there has only been one during 1976.

A widespread resurgence of sheep scab in 1975 and 1976 has led to the reintroduction of compulsory dipping and controls on movement of sheep and in the autumn of 1976 these will operate throughout Great Britain. This eradication campaign, involving a national flock of about 27 million sheep, calls for enormous effort and would be impossible without the full co-operation of local authorities.

An example of a different kind is the development of a campaign, first and primarily to ensure that rabies, now sweeping westwards across the continent of Europe, does not get into Britain; and secondly to have prepared contingency plans to ensure that we can swiftly and efficiently stamp out any outbreak of this dreadful disease should it unfortunately occur despite all our efforts to prevent it. Both the campaign to prevent the illegal entry of rabies susceptible animals and the contingency plans for outbreak control have called for enthusiastic co-operation between all interests at national and local level. I am glad to be able to say that the part local authorities have played and are playing is most commendable.

Frederick Peart

ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR AGRICULTURE AND HORTICULTURE IN ENGLAND AND WALES

The Advisory Council for Agriculture and Horticulture considers and reports on agricultural and horticultural matters within the field of responsibility of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which may be referred to the Council by the Minister or Ministry. (c/o Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food)

Chairman: Sir Nigel Strutt, TD, DL, FRAgS, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Whitehall Pl., London, SW1A 2HH.

Secretary: Mr. S. Hampson, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Great Westminster Hse., Horseferry Rd., London, SW1P 2AE.

AGRICULTURAL MARKETING ACT 1958: CONSUMERS' COMMITTEES AND COMMITTEES OF INVESTIGATION

Under the provisions of Section 19 of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, the appropriate Minister or Ministers are required to appoint Consumers' Committees and Committees of Investigation for England and Wales, for Scotland and for Great Britain.

The Committees were originally appointed in 1933 but did not function from 1939 to 1953 when the majority of schemes were suspended or modified under Defence Regulations.

Marketing Schemes are in operation for Hops (England), Wool (United Kingdom), Potatoes (Great Britain), and Milk (one scheme for England and Wales and three for Scotland).

The duty of a Consumers' Committee is to consider and report to the Minister on:

(1) the effect of any scheme approved by the Minister, which is for the time being in force, on consumers of the regulated product; and

(2) any complaints made to the Committee as to the effect of any such scheme on consumers of the regulated product.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales, acting jointly, have appointed the Consumers' Committee for England and Wales as follows:

Chairman: Dr. J. R. Cockroft, OBE, MB, ChB; E. J. Bovill; Miss J. Dundas, BA; Mrs. J. R. E. Evans, OBE; E. J. Frary, FCA; M. Myers, MA (Cantab); T. A. Owen, MA (Oxon); Mrs. R. E. Roberts, MBE; Mrs. P. Turner, MSc (Econ); J. M. Wood, OBE.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales, acting jointly, have appointed the Committee for England and Wales with the addition of Mrs. H. J. Millar and —— to act as the Consumers' Committee for Great Britain.

The Secretary of State for Scotland has appointed the Consumers' Committee for Scotland as follows:

Mrs. H. J. Millar, MA (Chairman); A. D. Buthlay; Mrs. J. Cook, JP; H. R. Crawford; Mrs. M. Y. Dunlop; Mrs. A. M. Lamb.

The duty of a Committee of Investigation is to consider and report to the Minister, if the Minister in any case so directs, on:

(i) any report made by a Consumers' Committee appointed under Section 19 of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958,

(ii) any complaint made to the Minister as to the operation of a marketing scheme which, in the opinion of the Minister, could not be considered by a Consumers' Committee, or

(iii) any question referred by the Minister under the provisions of Section 20 (3) of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, which deals with directions that may be given by the Minister to marketing boards.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and the Secretary of State for Wales, acting jointly, have appointed the Committee of Investigation for England and Wales as follows: Ronald G. Waterhouse, QC, MA, LLB(Cantab) (Chairman); R. G. B. Crittall, OBE, MA; L. P. Foldes, BCom, MSc(Econ); A. Forman; R. John, CBE, OStJ, JP; D. G. Richards, FCA.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales, acting jointly, have appointed the same Committee to act as the Committee of Investigation for Great Britain. In addition Walter Smyth, FCA has been appointed as a member of the Great Britain Committee to act on those occasions when the Committee is considering schemes applicable to Northern Ireland or any part of Northern Ireland (Section 53 (5), AMA 1958).

The Secretary of State for Scotland has appointed the Committee of Investigation for Scotland as follows: R. H. McDonald, MC, QC, MA, LLB (Chairman); A. Forman; Ian W. Macdonald, MA, CA; Miss M. M. O'Sullivan.

Secretary of the Consumers' Committees for England and Wales and for Great Britain: A. E. Levy, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Great Westminster Hse., Horseferry Rd., London, SW1P 2AE.

Secretary of the Committees of Investigation for England and Wales and for Great Britain: A. E. Levy, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Great Westminster Hse., Horseferry Rd., London, SW1P 2AE.

Secretary of the Scottish Committees: Miss A. P. Bayliss, Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, Chesser Hse., Edinburgh, EH11 3AW.

HILL FARMING AND LIVESTOCK REARING ACTS 1946 to 1956; ADVISORY COMMITTEES

Section 32 of the Hill Farming Act 1946, as amended by the Livestock Rearing Act 1951, and the Hill Farming Act 1956, requires that an advisory committee for England, Wales and Northern Ireland, a sub-committee for Wales and an advisory committee for Scotland be appointed to advise Ministers in the exercise of their powers under the Acts.

Advisory Committee for England, Wales and Northern Ireland
Chairman: Dr. Gavin Strang, MP.

Secretary: G. Trevelyan, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Great Westminster Hse., Horseferry Rd., London, SW1P 2AE.

Sub-Committee for Wales
Chairman: G. Wilyman.

Secretary: J. P. McKeever, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Welsh Department, Plas Crug, Aberystwyth, Dyfed.

If yours is a council that likes to keep in touch, then get in touch with British Relay

We offer a unique service to municipalities in the field of television and sound communication systems.

Our wired TV service, eliminating aerials and interference is not only a service to the community, but more and more is being treated by progressive local councils as part of their local planning.

Our block signal system brings a wired television and radio service to every house in an estate, every flat in a block. It was, for instance, planned into the Barbican development.

British Relay handle the entire connection and maintenance of the system. The authority is charged an overall payment. The system can be planned to serve an entire city. It means that TV, colour or black and white, and radio, is laid on like the electricity supply system.

Our Special Services Division has also sound and vision systems to offer for industry, commerce, clubs, canteens and social welfare centres in addition to radio and TV systems for hospitals and hotels. We also offer closed circuit television, a Hotel Room Status System, puglica public address systems, sound reinforcement systems in addition to educational television radio and communications systems.

LOCAL AUTHORITY ARCHITECTURE

Review by GEOFFREY J. FOXLEY, DipArch, FRIBA, DipTP

Director of Development and Technical Services, London Borough of Harrow

The past twelve months has seen a significant change for local government departments and for the construction industry as a whole. In many ways the apparent "eventful year" of local government reorganization in 1974 seems not to have heralded or been prepared for the national — and world wide — economic situation. It is by no means clear how many new county, metropolitan and district authorities established departments geared to an amalgam of previous years' trends, only to find that within months of coming into being the workloads had changed markedly in volume and type.

Time will tell whether those county and district authorities which chose a sharing of building work activity based on sensible 'norms' as opposed to those who were established to undertake all known and likely future work themselves in the event chose the more rational and economic organization faced with subsequent economic constraint.

The "magic" of corporate management has still to be seen as operating in accord with the claims of the Bains Committee. Many authorities seem only to have changed the designations of officers, and standing committees and gone on operating in the "traditional manner". Some authorities have become disenchanted with the role of the Chief Executive, without apparently having paid proper regard to his function and the implementation of corporate planning has been made even more difficult because of financial constraints and as a consequence the natural reluctance to appoint to new posts.

In all this the work activity of the architect has become more difficult. Programmes have changed in character and volume: where rolling capital programmes have been established for as much as five years those in years 3, 4 and 5 can only in the event be regarded as "possibles" rather than being definite; the inflation of building costs makes for difficulties in budgeting for realistic tender and final account sums particularly over a number of years; which in turn makes the planning of finance support impossible and the relationship of capital expenditure to revenue — rate borne — critical and very sensitive. Not least, many architect's departments are finding that the philosophy of corporate management has produced elements or teams of programme planning work study O and M job evaluation/incentive bonus schemes for operatives and project co-ordination etc., which in far too many instances influences what architects should be doing without a fundamental understanding of what properly should be taking place.

All these influences, actions and reactions should make departments take stock of their economic and qualitative inputs and have full regard to the quality of the works they produce for the building owner and user.

Unemployment in the industry has risen to close on 200,000. Cement and brick deliveries were at mid 1975 the lowest for a decade and sales of building materials continue to fall and trade is gloomy, predicting a further drop of 15% for this year.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has issued his White Paper on Public Expenditure making for no increase in real terms for 1976–77 over 1975–76 and seeking further substantial economies in 1977–78 and 1978–79.

Housing capital expenditure is to be cut in the public sector from £827 million in 1975–76 to £769 million for 1976–77 and development opportunities are made more difficult by the Department of the Environment who are anxious to see no housing stock demolished but rather rehabilitated and improved — and in some cases denying access to the capital finance essential.

The School Building Programme allocation for 1976–77 of some £186 million is a reduction of some £30 million on the previous year, and whilst a further allocation of £30 million has been made in the current year for modernization it is by no means certain that local authorities with rate increases in mind will wish to take up their allocations.

The construction industry has been used yet again to regulate the overall level of demand in the economy. Used as an economic regulator, it is sad that the industry is either overstressed in times of economic prosperity, or savagely cut back in a period of recession.

There can be no doubt that more regard will be paid in the future by building owners to making better use of the buildings which they own, and new building having much more regard to real needs, energy conservation and insulation (sound and thermal) etc. Additionally, the effects of the Health and Safety at Work Regulations have commenced to be felt and their continued implementation will have significant ramifications for designers and constructors as well as users and owners of buildings.

Development opportunities—in the private sector as well as the public one—have and will continue to be diminished, until a more favourable financial climate is obtained.

The greater demand for restoration work (for example the impact of European Architectural Heritage Year 1975—and the success of a number of local authorities who gained awards or commendations) and rehabilitation of older structures—particularly in the housing field—has now begun to emerge as government policy.

Similarly the more exacting requirements which the diminished number of new buildings must meet, such as having long-life, loose-fit and low energy consumption; interpreting the increasing mass of legislation, and providing an economic cost-in-use require more skills and experience in their design and construction.

The slackness in the demand for new buildings, which in the past have been produced frequently under great pressures of time and limited costs, is now affording opportunities in other professional work previously either not tackled at all or only now beginning to be undertaken. For example:

> The spending of more time on the appraisal of existing stocks of buildings owned by local authorities, and a more thorough examination of feasible solutions to accommodation and design problems than previously thought worthwhile or necessary.
> Greater investment in design and re-design services which can help produce new or altered buildings which ought to cost less to maintain, service and run than previously expected over their life span.

The past year or so has shown the considerable need to review certain forms of construction and materials evidenced by the Summerland and Fairfield disasters, the use of high alumina cement, coupled with the adoption by a growing number of authorities, of "fire philosophy" design drawings and records.

With limited finance available, authorities have tended to increase minor works adaptations and alterations, which have called for a more searching and critical examination of each proposal. It would appear essential and economically advantageous if alterations and extensions were not undertaken until the "usefulness" of the existing building has been reviewed in detail.

The Department of the Environment Circular 88/75 has emphasized that the best use of existing resources must be made at a time when the upkeep of premises would seem to have to remain below the level generally accepted as desirable in the recent past. This condition has provided an opportunity to develop "planned maintenance", a procedure requiring careful and regular surveys of premises, accurate recording of facts about their conditions and the concentration of sufficient resources on the vital maintenance work as will avoid excessive expense in future years.

However, building maintenance programmes have been cut for several years—principally to keep the rate burden down—and this has been done at a time when the country is facing a major maintenance programme resulting from the post-1950 new building surge.

Many authorities have commenced to undertake examinations of the fuel efficiency of installations in existing buildings establishing monitoring systems which can highlight economic use of feed-stock fuels, misuse and efficiency of plant, heat leakages etc.

The national need for energy conservation—which additionally provides conserving finance—has prompted most local authorities to examine:

> Research into fuel consumption records, examination of tariffs, negotiating with the statutory boards for rebates and reductions and instructing building users to reduce outputs and unnecessary demands.

Need to change to more suitable and economic fuels.
Improving systems and controls (e.g. optimum start devices).
Acceptable minimal air changes, room and water temperatures, and reducing heat losses.
Boiler and plant and electrical installation efficiency.

As mentioned earlier, the last year or so has seen a plethora of legislation backed up by numerous Department Circulars. Sensible and realistic "cost yardsticks" have failed to be established since those set by the then Ministry of Education in the early '50s, and that set by the Department of the Environment over many years now has in my view served as a constraint, rather than a means of readily providing local authority architects with a formula which enables them to mount early and realistic design solutions.

Regrettably, the least assistance rendered to local authorities by the Government has been the apparent inability to mount rolling programmes covering 4 5 years. The result has been that by and large "starts" years are only generally agreed finally months before the appropriate year. This means in practical terms that works on sites invariably commence at the end of the financial year, rather than during the first two quarters of the year, with the obvious benefits of costs and the fine weather building period.

Lateness of "year only" approvals also means for the local authority that they are concerned at too late a time in considering the revenue contribution to a new building in terms of furnishing, staffing and maintenance etc. With the Government's policy on public expenditure making local authorities understandably sensitive to the rate burden it is essential that the make up of forward programmes is known some years in advance.

Today there must be a growing number of education committees who are deciding not to build new premises because of the lateness of formal approval and the reluctance to increase the rate burden.

It is likely that the only public new building over the next few years will be in the fields of housing and education, with little or no capital expenditure on social services, police or other personal services. However, we are still all aware of the numerous schools which have large numbers of mobile classrooms attached to them, schools housed in timber structures of some 40 years' age (plus Health and Safety at Work!), quite apart from the ever apparent need for an increased and improved housing stock.

Summary

Looking back over the years from the immediate post war period into the early '70s there has been a dramatic surge of new buildings, principally housing and schools supplemented by service buildings such as shopping, business premises, libraries, clinics etc., etc. This period has seen the need for a variety of building systems, many based on factory-made components, or concrete battery casting on the larger sites or closely grouped sites. Over this period when society was demanding these new homes and facilities, there was little or no time for reflection in depth and real maintenance and conservation were not fully regarded.

Today the position is radically different. Currently and for the foreseeable future, there is a marked reduction in the design and construction of new buildings. With the financial difficulties has come a time of apparent standstill when so much more has to be provided in terms of new building, replacement building, conservation, improvement and adaption.

The period of relative standstill should be seized upon as an opportunity for re-appraisal of programme processes, critical examinations of building techniques, components and materials so that the quality and economics of work undertaken in a better climate have been thought out and prepared to enable a "norm" of workload to be mounted avoiding the "peak and trough" of activity which has occasioned our many faults and inadequacies in the past.

With significant unemployment in the construction industry it is worthy of note that some local authority architect's departments which have a down turn of work activity have commenced to share work with those departments who have a greater workload than their current staffing enables them to manage. This cross fertilization arising from a difficult financial situation should benefit the authorities concerned.

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY PROSPECTS

Review by R. M. WILLAN

President of the National Federation of Building Trades Employers

The prospects for construction in the 12 to 18 months ahead remain extremely bleak.

NFBTE's latest State of Trade Inquiry indicates just how far our industry has sunk into the recession that began to overtake us in 1973.

Two thirds of the firms questioned say they are currently operating at three-quarters capacity or less; and altogether 1976 could be appreciably worse than 1975 in terms of volume of building work carried out.

The unemployment situation alone is deserving of special examination. If the materials supply and ancillary trades are taken into account the total figure of unemployed in the construction industry is probably around $\frac{1}{4}$ million.

Assuming the total workforce is normally around one million, this represents an unemployment rate of 25 per cent. No other industry is bearing anything like the same burden.

The main reason for such high levels of unemployment is, of course, shortage of new building work.

With public expenditure cuts biting over the next few years; with the continuing lack of business confidence and, therefore, lack of investment in new industrial and commercial buildings and with the weakness of sterling in the international money markets, it is difficult to see any early prospect of a substantial increase in construction demand.

Only on the housing front is there any real sign of improvement. The recovery here, however, is threatened by various factors which I will deal with later.

The shortage of new work—over 25 per cent down on the peak levels of 1972–3—is causing another serious problem. Recruitment of craft apprentices, into the building industry has been maintained at encouragingly high levels during the past three years. Approaching 40,000 such young people have chosen construction as their career and have been taken into the industry. A great deal of energy and effort has been devoted to this task by members of NFBTE, by the Construction Industry Training Board and by the construction unions.

Government too, through the Training Services Agency, has played a helpful role in encouraging training and recruitment.

Now, as the recession continues in its third year, the future of some of these apprentices is being called increasingly into doubt.

Urgent action has been taken, both directly by NFBTE and, with the unions, through the National Joint Council for the Building Industry, to persuade firms with fuller order books and heavier work-loads to take on apprentices temporarily.

It is to be hoped that these actions can ease the crises facing these young people. Certainly it would be a tragedy if the sterling work done by employers to ensure that construction can draw on a skilled workforce in future years came to no avail. I doubt if we shall easily replace apprentices lost in this way.

One major opportunity to assist the building industry was missed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Denis Healey, in his Spring budget.

He began by saying that his budget was about jobs and inflation; that "the outlook for unemployment now looks distinctly brighter"—but his ultimate package has had at best only a marginal effect on construction demand prospects and, consequently, on job availability in the past few months.

Welcome as were his moves to ease Capital Transfer Tax provisions and relieve smaller companies of some, at least, of their Corporation Tax burden, they did little initially towards fundamentally restoring general business and industrial confidence.

Without this, construction is continuing to suffer. There is one possible exception—the housing sector. Here, despite the uncertainties created by the Government's costly and completely unnecessary land nationalisation measures, there may be a glimmer of hope.

Last year saw a 40 per cent improvement in private housing starts over the appalling downturn of 1974, when barely 100,000 new houses were started. Public sector housing, too, went ahead.

This year has seen further progress with The House Builders Federation, NFBTE's affiliated organisation, urging that some means be found of helping young, first time home buyers to climb onto the first rung of the owner-occupation ladder.

This surely makes good sense when, on the Government's own admission, it costs £875 a year to subsidise an average new council house as against £290 to grant tax relief to a house purchaser taking on a mortgage.

The result of Government action to help more young people buy their own home—especially at a time when real incomes are being squeezed by the counter-inflation strategy—would be a substantial saving of public money.

It would also consolidate the house building recovery and assist in cutting the wider construction industry's jobless total.

There is one other direction where the Government could achieve the twin targets of cutting back public spending and helping the construction industry ride out the current recession—this is in the area of direct labour building.

Our concern here is twofold: we want the work of these departments to be won in fair competition with private contractors and we want to see full public accountability for their operations and financing.

A major step in achieving these aims could be achieved by the immediate implementation of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accounting (CIPFA) report.

This recommends: that contracts should generally be put out to competitive tender; that accounts of direct works undertakings must clearly demonstrate to ratepayers that the direct works organisation is able to provide a service at no more overall cost than its competitors; that the same standards should be adopted in dealing with contracts carried out by direct labour and independent contractors and that direct labour organisations should be established as separate trading units.

If these criteria could be met then ratepayers would not be in so much danger of seeing their money wasted in subsidising inefficient, loss-making direct labour departments.

This problem apart, however, NFBTE has very much in mind its longstanding, mutually beneficial relationships with local authorities up and down the country. Those relationships are founded on a substantial solid base of joint achievement.

It is my hope that these relationships will continue to prosper in the interests of the community at large.

BUILDING CONSORTIA

1. EDUCATIONAL BUILDING CONSORTIA

Soon after the war the Hertfordshire County Council developed a "kit" of components for primary schools as an alternative to the huts which authorities were often being forced to use because of the shortage of basic building materials. Their work was carried forward during the early 1950s by the Ministry of Education (as it then was) and by commercial manufacturers. A number of "systems" were produced, in which the components, though highly standardized, could be assembled without modification to produce a variety of buildings. These systems were widely used.

In 1957, on the initiative of the Nottinghamshire County Council, a consortium of local authorities was formed with the title of CLASP (Consortium of Local Authorities, Special Programme) to develop a system using a light steel frame. Two advantages were that the system would be under the control of a client; and that, with the grouping of the requirements of a number of authorities, components would be produced in sufficient quantities to reduce costs.

Such was the success of CLASP that the consortium idea spread until it now covers a very large part of the country. Four of the consortia (CLASP, SCOLA, SEAC, ONWARD) have developed their own systems using prefabricated components; two other (CLAW and MACE) are developing special systems; another (CMB) has, in addition to developing its own system components, adopted a rationalized approach to traditional building methods based on the co-ordination of dimensional requirements among its members; ASC is developing its own standards and provides a forum for the exchange of information, the pooling of skills and development experience and machinery for co-operation on projects in which its members have a common interest.

The general aims of these consortia are to obtain economies by the bulk purchase of components and to increase building productivity by the greater industrialization of building, leading to a reduction in the time spent in design in the office and in construction on the site. They are concerned mainly with educational buildings, particularly schools, but their methods are also used successfully for such buildings as fire stations, clinics and offices. A special feature of the CLASP system is that it is designed to deal with the problem of mining subsidence faced by a number of its members.

All the consortia are continuously engaged on the improvement and development of their building methods. They have informal organizations consisting of a board of chief architects meeting three or four times a year, a technical working party meeting approximately every month and usually an annual meeting of elected representatives of member authorities. Full members play an active part in policy making. Authorities whose requirements are too small, or sporadic, to justify full membership may join as associate members through the agency of full members or the Department of Education and Science. Full members make proportionate contributions to meet the cost of development work; associate members pay a fee.

The consortia co-operate with the Department of Education and Science and with each other on work of common interest.

The following new County Councils are expected to be members of the consortia:

CLASP (Consortium of Local Authorities, Special Programme).
Chairman: H. T. Swain, County Architect, Nottinghamshire.
County Councils: Derbyshire, Durham, Mid Glamorgan, Lanarkshire, Nottinghamshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, West Glamorgan.

Important Advance in repair of Concrete Structures

The CATHITE method of repair is based on fundamental scientific principles. It halts decay and the new repair becomes monolithic with the old concrete and load bearing. It is unlikely that this great adhesion can be achieved by other means. The repaired structure is given a new long lease of life with the minimum risk of further spalling. It looks, functions and has the life of a new job. No resins, mesh or guns are used to accomplish these outstanding results. Moreover the CATHITE method is dustless. ORGANIZATIONS CONCERNED WITH BURIAL AND CREMATION ADMINISTRATION 58

Review by P. A. PLEWS, FInstBCA

Deputy Secretary, Institute of Burial & Cremation Administration (Inc.) (in place of Mrs. Jean M. Ramsden, FInstBCA, who is this year's President of the Institute)

Cremation

The number of cremations taking place has been increasing steadily over the years. This increase continued further during 1975 – the total number of cremations carried out in Great Britain during the year ended 31st December 1975 was 393,994—an increase of 5 781 over the previous year. The percentage of cremations of all deaths based on preliminary figures is 60·9% a rise of 1% on the previous year 1974. The total number of crematoria serving the British Islands and the Channel Islands now total 218 the two new ones opened during 1975 being Springfield (a new crematorium serving Liverpool) and Bretby at Burton on Trent. There are a number of other projects under consideration and it is hoped that the restrictions on Local Government spending will not delay any schemes that Local Authorities may wish to complete.

The new scheme for the training of cremation operators, under the auspices of the Local Government Training Board has not yet commenced. The crematoria at Bristol (Canford) Leeds (Lawnswood) City of London and Middlesbrough have been appointed as Training Crematoria under the scheme. It is understood that the date for the commencement will be announced shortly. The present scheme has therefore continued to function under the auspices of the Institute of Burial & Cremation and their practical and oral examinations with a Certificate of proficiency for successful candidates has enabled the holders to obtain a plus rate of pay and provided Authorities with operators trained to a high standard of efficiency. Full details can be obtained from the secretary of the Technicians Committee: J. Sutton FInstBCA, Cemeteries & Crematorium Department, 6 Bugle St., Southampton, SO1 0AJ (0703 28609).

The recommendations made in the report by the Broderick Committee on death certification and Coroners has still not been implemented. The Home Secretary made a statement on Wednesday, 6th August 1975 in a written reply setting out the Government s conclusions on the report the statement made was mainly intended as the basis for consultations with all interested parties. The Institute, along with other interested parties still await the opportunity of making their views known in the context of the Minister s statement. We look forward to early action being taken on amendments of the regulations governing cremation.

Cemeteries and Burial Grounds

New cemeteries are now laid out and administered on the lawn type principle. This allows for easy maintenance and the general use of mechanical grass-cutting equipment. A number of Authorities are considering the laying out of new cemeteries with no memorial head-stones. The only form of identification is a Plaque situated at ground level. The Authorities stipulate in their regulations the size type and materials to be used which may be of stone or bronze. Many problems are still experienced in the maintenance of the older cemeteries and burial grounds. Many local authorities have exercised their right to remove derelict memorials many sinking kerbstones thus allowing the surfaces to be levelled and turfed, making the maintenance by machine much easier.

Examination of Officers

The Institute of Burial & Cremation Administration (Inc.) hold examinations annually the content is administrative and technical, divided into five courses:

1. Maintenance and layout of cemeteries.
2. Office Records and administration.
3. Burial and Cremation Law.
4. Cremation.
5. Horticulture.

The Institute offers every assistance to students, and a special coaching scheme with expert tutors is available. The examinations are recognised by the Local Government Examination Board for promotion purposes and also by the National Joint Council for Local Authorities Professional Technical and Clerical Services. Associate members of our Institute must obtain the Final Diploma before they become eligible for full membership. Details of the Coaching Scheme and examinations can be obtained from:

L. L. Wild, FInstBCA(Dip),
National Education Officer,
51 Orgreave La., Sheffield, S13 9NE
(0742-396068).

National Seminar

The Institute of Burial & Cremation Administration (Inc.) arranges each year a National Seminar of three days, for students and members at:

Pendrell Hall College of Residential Adult Education,
Codsall Wood,
Nr. Wolverhampton, Staffs.

on the various aspects of cemeteries and crematoria work. These Seminars have been found to be of immense value the 1976 programme being no exception. After the welcome by the Chairman, L. L. Wild, FInstBCA(Dip) and the President, J. S. Smith, FInstBCA, there followed a full and interesting programme:

"Management by Objective"—L. L. Wild, FInstBCA(Dip)
"Cremation"—R. G. Gill, MInstBCA(Dip)
"Burial & Cremation Law"—D. H. Thompson, MInstBCA(Dip)

Technical Advisers

The Institute of Burial & Cremation Administration (Inc.) and the Federation of British Cremation Authorities both operate Technical Advisory Services designed to assist Authorities in the layout of cemeteries and the planning of crematoria, also any matters appertaining thereto. These services are widely used and appreciated. Contact with the technical officers is made in the first instance throughout the respective secretaries.

Conference

The 34th Annual Joint Conference of Burial & Cremation Authorities was held at the Spa Grand Hall, Scarborough, on 23rd, 24th and 25th September, 1975. At the well-attended Sessions members and officer delegates representing Local Authorities from all parts of the United Kingdom were present. The Mayor of Scarborough, Coun. A. Harvard Barker, FRCS gave a warm Yorkshire welcome, followed by the opening address. There then followed addresses at the various sessions, each proving to be most interesting and informative:

"The Consolidation of Burial & Cremation Law"
by Sir Frank Marshall, MA, LLB.
"The Landscaping of Crematoria and Cemeteries"
by Miss Mary Mitchell, FILA, FFB.
"Visits to Crematoria"
by John Sutton, FInstBCA, Superintendent & Registrar, City of Southampton.
"Micro-filming"
by Paul McMahon,
Planning Officer, Newbury District Council.
"The Importance of Purchasing"
by P. B. Braney, MInstP. & S.
Assistant Cemeteries Officer, Middlesbrough.
"Some Aspects of Registration"
by G. J. Swift, AInstBCA,

City of Bradford.
"A Superintendent's Reflections"
by C. E. Wild, MInstBCA, Saltburn, Cleveland.

THE CREMATION SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN (established 1874)

The pioneer of Cremation in Great Britain. Built the first crematorium in this country; drew up code of practice which later was adopted as the basis of the first Cremation Act 1902. Now a registered charity, the Cremation Society is pleased to offer its free advisory service to all municipalities. The Society organizes an annual conference for cremation authorities and in addition publishes a quarterly journal "Pharos". It also issues a very useful "Cremation Society Handbook". Further information is available from the General Secretary, Mr. K. G. C. Prevette, The Cremation Society of Great Britain, Woodcut Hse., Ashford Rd., Hollingbourne, Maidstone, Kent, ME17 1XH (Telephone: Maidstone (0622) 37877 & 38034).

Review by R. P. GADD, LLB, AMRAeS, FIArb, Barrister

The most significant happening in aviation during the last year has been the introduction of Concorde into airline service with British Airways and Air France. If these airlines can make the operation of supersonic airliners an economic proposition it will not be long before other airlines find it necessary to own supersonic aircraft. The main outstanding problem is with the North Atlantic service. Concorde needs these vital routes to prove itself, and at the time of writing New York was still fighting the verdict of Mr. Coleman, U.S. Secretary of Transportation, to allow Concorde into the United States on a trial basis.

Elsewhere in aviation the continual rise in costs is the most important factor which is affecting development. The need for the CAA to break even by 1977/78 has led to large increases in their charges for services and in licensing fees. The heavy burden of inflation has caused airport operators to increase their charges to users and of course airlines are still suffering from increased operating costs. The municipal airports and commercial airports have continued to use every effort to minimise costs and maximise revenue so that deficits can at least be contained. However, in a number of cases airports have shown increased traffic in spite of the generally depressed state of the economy.

A record number of almost 30 million passengers used the British Airports Authority's seven airports in 1975 despite a drop in air transport movements. The overall increase of 5·9% in passenger traffic more than recovered the ground lost in 1974, since it also represents a 2% increase over 1973. Passenger traffic increased at Heathrow by 6% with gains of 2% on North Atlantic routes and 20% on other long-haul services. This growth was achieved despite a drop of 4·4% in air transport movements. Gatwick's passenger traffic increase of 4·3% was helped by a major reversal in the trend of its charter services, which recovered from a decline of 16% in 1974 to a gain of 10% in 1975. Stansted maintained its growth rate, with 19·5% more passengers than in 1974, which in itself was an increase of 13% over 1973. Among the BAA's four Scottish airports, Glasgow's figures for passengers, air transport movements and cargo were hit by industrial problems, including a five-week shut-down early in the year, before the airport was transferred to the Authority in 1975.

Manchester, which continues to develop its position as a major international airport, opened extensions to the terminal building, aprons, roads and taxiways, estimated to cost some £9,800,000. All these extensions have operated satisfactorily throughout the year and have proved invaluable in the smooth running of the airport. From the traffic point of view, 1974 was not such a good year. There were the tremendous increases in fuel costs, which in turn had a depressing effect on travel generally, and led to the cessation of operations by some travel companies. For the first time since 1946, the number of passengers handled at the airport during 1974 was less than in the previous year. Freight traffic was less disappointing—the total amount of freight and mail handled in 1974 amounting to 46,259 metric tons as compared with 45,322 metric tons in 1973. This is a reflection of the general depression in world trade and the increases in fuel costs which had a big effect on civil aviation generally. In addition to the proposed second main runway and the cargo complex possible developments for the future include the provision of nose loaders to certain gate positions and on international pier "B" the installation of a moving walkway, nose loaders, air bridges and associated lounges.

Leeds Bradford airport has notched up its highest-ever number of air transport movements. During 1975, 48,570 aircraft landed or took off from the airport, compared with 44,435 in 1974, but the number of passengers using the airport dropped by 5,426—just under 2%. The rise in traffic movements came mostly from business, executive, pleasure and training flights.

For East Midlands airport last year was the first in which the number of passengers using the airport had taken a downward trend. This was of course due to the adverse conditions prevailing and was not as substantial as might have been expected earlier in the year. It is expected that this lost ground will be largely recovered in the current financial year. The reduction in the number of air transport movements of only 2% compared with passengers of 10% reflects lower passenger loads and an increase in air cargo movements. There has been a significant 26% increase in total air cargo of which approximately 700 tonnes was attributable to a Belfast dock strike. Excluding this the increase would have been an encouraging 16%.

Newcastle airport made a significant recovery in 1975 after the problems and recession experienced generally in the difficult year of 1974. The traffic appears to have recovered to the 1973 all-time high level and the prospects for 1976 are extremely encouraging, with expansion of the existing network and new routes being operated. It is proposed to introduce a Special Rules Area and Zone (SRA/SRZ) around Newcastle airport as from 22nd April 1976. This requirement is due to the significant increase in air transport movements and other types of flying being undertaken in the area. Since the new terminal complex was opened in 1967, traffic has outgrown the facilities and an extension to the air traffic control/telecommunications block is currently being undertaken and it is proposed to carry out terminal building extensions in the immediate future. The Airport Committee already have approved plans for a runway extension but this is now held in abeyance pending the Government's decision on the CAA advice to the Secretary of State for Trade following the Stratford Report on Airports in the Northern Region.

Tees-side airport is running at a low deficit rate despite the inflationary effects of the world-wide economic situation. Traffic statistics for the calendar year 1975 were maintained at almost the same level as in 1974; total passenger movements being 211,456 compared with 213,618. Aircraft movements decreased slightly to 37,652 and cargo figures were down to 1,109·8 tonnes. These figures were as expected in view of trade generally suffering from the economic situation. Government policy decisions are awaited on development within the national airport system. The proposals for Tees-side include expansion of the passenger and cargo terminal facilities and the general up-grading of the facilities such as air traffic control, telecommunications and other equipment which would provide for an increasing number of longer range air services to and from the North-East. The proposed runway extension would permit regular flights from Tees-side to eastern United States with the latest aircraft; it is envisaged that there will be a demand for direct scheduled services on the Atlantic route in the 1980's.

During 1975 Birmingham airport had a total of 62,443 aircraft movements and 1,130,040 passengers and 3,004·3 short tons of freight. These figures are slightly better than 1974 although freight was down a little. Birmingham continues to develop its position as one of the U.K. major airports.

Future development of regional airports will depend upon the results of the Government review of airports policy which was instituted in 1975, following the abandonment of the Maplin Airport Plan. The Government plans include the publication of several consultative documents as a basis for detailed consultation. The first dealing with the London areas was published in November 1975 and will be followed by a second dealing with regional airports. In addition the CAA have published CAP 380 which discusses airport development in the South West and South Wales. It is obviously vital for the future of aviation in general and airports in particular that the Government institute an integrated and comprehensive transport policy as soon as is possible. In the view of the writer it seems that an overall transport policy embracing air, railway, road and sea travel for the U.K. as a whole is long overdue.

An important innovation during the past year has been the introduction by the CAA of a mandatory system of incident and occurrence reporting. This will certainly be beneficial in improving the level of flight safety and as the Chairman of the CAA, Lord Boyd-Carpenter states in CAP 382, which gives details of the scheme, the object is to "secure free and uninhibited reporting and that it will not be its policy to institute proceedings in respect of unpremeditated or inadvertent infringements reported under the scheme except in a most flagrant case involving a dereliction of duty amounting to gross negligence."

It seems that with the possibility of an improvement in economic conditions during 1976/77 it is likely that during the next year the aviation world will see a return to at least some expansion.

Royal Aeronautical Society.

NATIONAL JOINT COUNCIL FOR CIVIL AIR TRANSPORT

Address: 200 Buckingham Palace Rd., London, SW1W 9TJ (01-834 2323, Ext. 2414).

Chairman: Howard Phelps, Group Personnel Director, British Airways. Vice-Chairman: Mark Young, General Sec. BALPA. Joint Secretaries: J. G. Smith, BSc(Econ), FIPM, (Secretary for Employers' Side), E. Mackenzie, ASTMS (Secretary for Employees' Side).

CIVIL AVIATION AUTHORITY

Address: Aviation Hse., 129 Kingsway, London, WC2B 6NN (01-405 6922).

The Civil Aviation Authority was set up in accordance with the Civil Aviation Act 1971 and assumed its main functions on 1 April 1972. It is charged with the regulation of airlines and organizers of air travel, the licensing of air routes, the control of the safety of civil flying generally, the operation jointly with the Secretary of State for Defence of air navigation services, advising on the provision of aerodromes and the management of certain aerodromes in Scotland.

Members: The Rt. Hon. Lord Boyd-Carpenter, DL (Chairman); R. R. Goodison, (Deputy Chairman); Air Marshal Sir Ivor Broom, CB CBE, DSO DFC, AFC; M H. Vivian; The Hon. Maxwell Stamp; H. C. Partridge; R. Colegate; Part time members: Prof. D. Keith-Lucas; M. H. W. Wells; Group Captain Sir Douglas Bader, CBE, DSO, DFC; Sir Henry Phillips; J. C. Williamson.

AERODROME OWNERS ASSOCIATION

Secretary's Address: 18 Orchard St., Bristol, Avon, BS1 5DX (0272 392480)

The Aerodrome Owners Association was established in 1934 and has a continuous record of activity on behalf of Aerodrome Owners since then. It has been and is the only Association in the United Kingdom representing purely aerodrome interest. The objects of the Association are to promote, protect and further the interests of aerodrome owners throughout the United Kingdom, ranging from the largest major airport to the smallest grass airstrip and including stolports and heliports. The Association is the body consulted by the Government through the Departments of Trade and Industry and the Civil Aviation Authority—on proposed changes in the legislation affecting aerodromes, and on the line the Government proposes to take concerning aerodromes at international meetings, especially those of the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Chairman: D. Melrose, DFC.
Vice Chairman: G. E. Maggs.
Secretary: R. P. Gadd, LLB, AMRAeS, FIArb.

JOINT AIRPORTS COMMITTEE OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

This Joint Committee was originally set up by the former AMC, CCA and UDCA in 1966 as a forum for the discussion of matters of concern and common interest to members of those Associations who operated aerodromes or who had an interest in them. In 1971 membership of JACOLA was limited to local authorities operating airports (non operating authorities ceasing to be members), and an "operating authority" which was a consortium or joint committee was given two seats. Following the reorganization of local government, the three new Associations—ACC, ADC and AMA—re-appointed JACOLA in the Autumn of 1974, on the basis of one representative from each local authority airport, whether run by an individual authority, a joint committee or a consortium.

Membership of JACOLA now consists of elected members from Birmingham, Blackpool, Bournemouth (Hurn), Bristol, Coventry, East Midlands, Exeter, Glamorgan (Rhoose), Gloucester/Cheltenham, Leeds/Bradford, Liverpool, Luton, Manchester, Newcastle (North-East), Norwich, Southend, Swansea and Teesside Airports; in most cases the member is Chairman of the Committee controlling the airport.

The Chairman is Coun. V. Turton (Birmingham Airport). Advisers are the Airport Directors of Birmingham, Manchester, Newcastle and Southend and the Chief Executive of Luton and the Secretary to the East Midlands Joint Airport Committee.

The Secretary's office is at 36 Old Queen St., London, SW1H 9JE (01-930 9861).

BRITISH AIRPORTS AUTHORITY

Address: 2 Buckingham Gate, London, SW1 (01-834 6621)

The international airports at Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Prestwick were vested in the British Airports Authority by virtue of the provisions of the Airports Authority Act 1965 on 1st April 1966. On 1st April 1971 Edinburgh Airport was vested in the Authority. On 1.1.75 Aberdeen Airport was vested in the BAA. On 1.4.75 Glasgow Airport was vested in the BAA.

The Authority's Board is as follows:

Chairman: Nigel G. Foulkes, MA, FBIM.
Deputy Chairman: W. D. H. Gregson, CBE.
Members: Miss Katharine Whitehorn; N. Vinson; M. Marks; K. B. Walter; D. W. Turner; Lord Allen of Fallowfield, CBE.
Chief Executive: Norman J. Payne, CBE, BSc(Eng).

The Authority's statutory duty is to own and manage the seven airports mentioned above and to provide at those aerodromes such services and facilities, with the exception of navigation services, as are in the Authority's opinion necessary or desirable for their operation, having regard to the development of air transport and to efficiency, economy and safety of operation. It is also the Authority's financial duty to secure that its revenue is not less than sufficient for making provision for the meeting of charges properly chargeable to revenue, taking one year with another.

Secretary and Solicitor: M. W. T. Nott.

HEATHROW AIRPORT CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

The British Airports Authority which, under the Airports Authority Act 1965 (now consolidated in The Airports Authority Act 1975) replaced the Ministry of Aviation as the authority responsible for Heathrow Airport, has continued the consultative arrangements which are now provided for in Section 2 of the Act. The Committee is constituted on the following basis:

Greater London Council	6	London Chamber of Commerce and Industry	1
Berkshire CC	1	National Chamber of Trade	1
Buckinghamshire CC	1	Trades Union Congress	1
Surrey CC	1	London Tourist Board	1

Review by FRANK RAINE-ALLEN, MBE, CStJ, JP, DPA

Civil Defence Adviser and Principal Emergency Planning Officer to the Greater London Council

In the prevailing constraints on expenditure and manpower during the past year, progress by local authorities in their statutory duty of preparing plans to meet a war emergency was necessarily limited. The Home Office, however, continued with its undertaking to provide guidance to enable local authorities to proceed.

Community Organization in War

The extent to which Home Defence plans should provide for the involvement of the community below the level of a district or London borough headquarters has long been the subject of controversy. To dispel uncertainty about the general policy but without restricting the discretion of local authorities on the matter, the Home Office advised local authorities of some general principles. The structure of any community organization, it suggested, should be readily understood, likely to be acceptable to the community itself and based on peacetime counterparts. Artificially created wartime headquarters below district or London borough level should be avoided. The organization should be capable of

(i) helping the community to organize itself in a wartime emergency so as to enhance the prospects of its members surviving;

(ii) ensuring that directions and guidance emanating from the government, the regional commissioner and the county and district Controllers reached the general public, were understood and followed by them; and

(iii) providing information about local conditions to assist county and district Controllers to assess the situation within their areas.

In the context of the Home Office advice the term "community" described a group of people of no pre-determined number who live, or work, in a particular locality and share a recognised identity and common interests. In rural areas, communities in villages or isolated groups of houses are more readily recognisable than in urban areas where wards, housing estates or individual streets or blocks of flats may have such an identity. But, it was asserted, with the aid of local knowledge communities can be identified for emergency planning purposes.

Unless a community was able to recognize situations where its peacetime existence could be threatened, it would be unlikely to respond to efforts to improve its capability to cope with the consequences of war. As preparedness for war depends upon awareness of an overt threat to national security and a release of information by the government on what the public should do, it was suggested that local authorities should concentrate on outline contingency plans for community organization in war, leaving their activation until a period of crisis.

Statutory agencies with specific functions would be active after attack and the main self-help survival tasks of a community would be complementary to them. Communities could never replace completely the services of the agencies but they could do much to lessen the burden at a time when trained manpower and materials would be scarce. The establishment of communications between the district or borough controller and each community would be essential and some local authorities had, in fact, already nominated and briefed wartime community leaders. A centre would also be needed where the public could offer their services.

Construction Work and Building Materials in War

In a post-attack situation there would be an urgent need to conserve all surviving resources. In conjunction with the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office, guidance on construction work and building materials applicable to local authorities in England and Wales was made available by the Home Office. For road and debris clearance, housing repairs, shelter for the homeless and emergency repairs for a wide range of public services vital to survival, co-ordination initially would be on a local basis. In the longer term, regionally and subsequently nationally, it would be necessary to determine priorities and to co-ordinate the deployment of construction resources for major repair and building of roads, bridges, essential public utilities and vital sections of industry.

For planning purposes it should be assumed that during any international crisis no special arrangements would be made to control production and supply of building materials or construction work, although some preliminary advice might then be issued. Only in the latter stages of a rapidly deteriorating international situation should it be assumed that Parliament would pass the necessary legislation granting emergency powers. This would probably enable the various Ministers or commissioners to direct and control building material production and building material stocks and distribution; recruit and direct labour; control all building and war emergency undertakings and bring them under a single Emergency Works Organization. The latter would operate under the unified concept of domestic regional government with day-to-day supervision of work and repairs exercised by a County/Group Works Officer and, under him, District/Borough Works Officer.

At County level there would be a County Works Officer supported by liaison officers from the Department of the Environment and his advisers from the construction industry. The County Works Officer would be a member of the County Controller's staff and under him would be responsible for the co-ordination and deployment of the Emergency Works Organization within the county. Similar arrangements would be applicable to each of the 5 Greater London Groups.

County and district councils were asked to:

(i) designate county and district works officers;
(ii) plan the wartime works organization needed;
(iii) plan for the redeployment of staff for the administration of the organization.
(iv) arrange for effective co-ordination with other public authorities within the county which have wartime essential works requirement.

Ports and Shipping in War

An informative memorandum, not calling for specific emergency planning measures by local authorities, was issued by the Home Office in conjunction with the Departments of Environment and Trade. It concentrates on matters, particularly in the ports, which could demand the wartime attention of some county and district controllers.

In the immediate post-attack period, Port Group Managers would try to establish contact with the nearest local authority wartime headquarters as the best source of local radiological information and advice. Decisions might also have to be taken about the urgent discharge of, for example, perishable food cargoes, and Port and Group Managers would look to district controllers in the first instance for assistance with labour and supporting services to offload, stock and protect cargoes.

Planning of the wartime arrangements is carried out by the Department of the Environment through emergency transport planning officers. Regular briefing sessions and occasional exercises are held for officials in industry nominated to wartime appointments in the port and shipping organization and to which senior local authority emergency planning representatives may be invited.

Finance

Local authority expenditure on Civil defence for 1975/76 adjusted to relevant expenditure terms and November 1974 prices was £2·4 million.

Replying to a question in the House of Commons (19 March 1976) the Home Secretary said that Civil Defence is bearing its full share of the cuts in public expenditure in 1978–9 and subsequent years. The main effect is in Civil Service manpower and further reductions in Home Office stockpiles of equipment.

The Home Defence College

The Home Office Home Defence College, Easingwold, was inaugurated in 1973 as the central training establishment for home defence in the United Kingdom.

The purpose of the College is to alert the higher echelons of management in local government, central government, the armed forces and other services and in industry to what is required of them in home defence, and in particular to assist local authorities to discharge their responsibilities for translating peacetime services to meet the needs of wartime and the situations posed by major peacetime emergencies.

With the object of making the greatest headway in the shortest time, the College's initial thrust has been directed towards the chief executives of the county councils, which authorities carry lead responsibility for devising local government war emergency plans. Nearly all county chief executives have now attended seminars at the College and effort is now being directed to the training of their opposite numbers in county districts. At the same time, increasing attention is being given to the education of the great body of elected members so that they may play their part in making local home defence policy in accordance with their statutory responsibilities.

Although elected members and chief executives are the College's primary target, the bulk of its training effort is applied to the education of second and third tier officers of local government and their equivalents in central government departments and authorities, to the training of senior police officers in their war duties, to the mounting of departmental policy-making studies and on other specialized activities.

To date, close on 5,000 have attended the College, including over 500 elected members, 52 county chief executives and 132 district chief executives, and this vigorous programme of central training has had much to do with the greater rate of advance in emergency planning that has been discernible throughout the country in the past two years.

Major Accidents and Natural Disasters

Reference was made in the 1976 edition of the Municipal Year Book to the preparation of detailed plans by local authorities for dealing with peacetime emergencies. In agreement with the various government departments and in consultation with the local authority associations, the Home Office issued up-dated and expanded guidance on major peacetime disasters and accidents. The object of the Home Office circular (No. ES 7/1975) was to encourage all local authorities to bring their contingency plans to a state of readiness. An aide-memoire on planning for civil emergencies was also issued to Directors of Social Services by the Department of Health and Social Security.

The Police, Fire and Ambulance services maintain up-to-date plans for handling all emergencies. Their arrangements were not affected in any way by the Home Office circular which recommended that local authorities should have a comprehensive plan designed to make the best possible use of all available resources in an emergency which cannot be cleared up solely by the three emergency services providing the initial response. The main roles of local authorities in an emergency are to maintain certain of the public services, to assist local residents in distress and to play a major part in co-ordinating the various local organizations giving help. Accordingly where no comprehensive plan had been prepared, local authorities were asked to take the initiative by calling together representatives of all the interests involved with a view to preparing one.

Useful advice was given by the Home Office on matters to be covered in emergency plans and assistance obtainable from the government. It has been the practice of authorities to prepare a report on action taken at any actual emergency and lessons drawn from the experience. The Government Departments concerned offered to accept copies of such reports to see if the conclusions contained material of general application which could usefully be drawn to the attention of other authorities.

REGIONAL SCIENTIFIC ADVISERS FOR CIVIL DEFENCE

An organization of Regional Scientific Advisers for Civil Defence has been set up throughout the country. In England and Wales the appointments are made by the Home Office, and the Advisers, who serve in an honorary capacity in time of peace, are accredited to the staff of the Chief Scientific Adviser of the Home Office. They give their advice and assistance independently to the Civil Defence authorities in their own Regions. Similar steps have been taken and appointments made in Scotland by the Scottish Home and Health Department and in Northern Ireland by the Ministry of Home Affairs.

North Region—Chief Scientific Adviser: N. Thorley, BSc, PhD, FInstP; Senior Scientific Advisers: Prof. A. W. Wolfendale, BSc, PhD, FInstP, Prof. S. L. Ranson, BSc, PhD.

Yorkshire—Chief Scientific Adviser: Prof. F. W. Spiers, CBE, DSc, PhD; Senior Scientific Advisers: Prof. W. D. Ollis, BSc, PhD, FRIC; Prof. G. F. J. Garlick, PhD, DSc, FInstP; Prof. P. L. Marsden, PhD.

East Midlands—Chief Scientific Adviser: Professor W. F. Nash, MSc, PhD, FInstP; Senior Scientific Advisers: T. Bowen-Jones, PhD, J. H. Phillips, MC, PhD, Prof. J. T. King, MA, DPhil.

East Region—Chief Scientific Adviser: B. C. Saunders, CBE, MA, PhD, ScD, DSc, FRIC; Senior Scientific Advisers: E. S. Shire, MA; A. A. Wilson, MA, MVSc, MRCVS; D. Scott Wilson, MBE, ARIC, CEng, MIGasE.

Greater London—Chief Scientific Advisers: H. D. Evans, BSc, PhD, AInstP; Prof. H. M. Barlow, PhD, FRS, FIEE, MIMech. CEng; J. C. Caygill, MA, PhD; Prof. L. Finkelstein, MSc, AInstP, AMIEE; Prof. M. R. C. McDowell, BSc, MA, PhD, FRAS.

South East—Chief Scientific Advisers: D. F. Shaw, CBE, MA, DPhil; Senior Scientific Advisers: J. D. Donald, BSc, FRIC; C. S. G. Phillips, MA, DSc; W. Davey, BSc, PhD, FRIC.

South West—Chief Scientific Adviser: F. C. Flack, PhD; Senior Scientific Advisers: D. F. Gibbs, MBE, BSc; J. Wilkinson, PhD, FLS; C. A. Meek, OBE, MSC, FInstP.

Wales—Chief Scientific Adviser: Prof. F. Llewellyn Jones, CBE, MA, DPhil, DSc, FInstP; Senior Scientific Advisers: L. R. Griffin, MBE, MSc, AInstP; Prof. C. G. Morgan, MSc, PhD, FInstP.

West Midland Region—Chief Scientific Adviser: Prof. M. Stacey, CBE, DSc, PhD, FRS; Senior Scientific Advisers: D. F. Bracher, PhD, AInstP; W. F. R. Pover, BSc, PhD, ARIC; J. A. H. Brown, MB, BS, MD, DTM&H.

North West Region—Chief Scientific Adviser: A. F. H. Ward, MA, PhD, FRIC; Senior Scientific Advisers: P. G. Brennan, BSc; Prof. M. G. Rusbridge, BA, PhD; M. J. Copsey, BSc, PhD; D. J. Sandiford, MA, MS, PhD.

Scotland—Chief Scientific Adviser: Sir Samuel Curran, MA, PhD, DSc, FRS; Senior Scientific Advisers: Prof. N. Feather, BA, PhD, FRS; J. M. Reid, MA; Prof. R. V. Jones, CB, CBE, MA, DPhil, FInstP, FRS; Prof. A. E. Ritchie, MA, BSc, MD, FRSE.

Northern Ireland—Chief Scientific Adviser: Prof. I. C. Roddie, MD, DSc, FRCPI. Senior Scientific Advisers: Prof. J. H. Biggart, CBE, DSc, MD, FRCP; Prof. K. G. Emeleus, CBE, MA, PhD.

REGIONAL AND SUB-REGIONAL BOUNDARIES

Consequent upon the reorganization of local Government in England and Wales under the Local Government Act 1972 revised Home Defence Regional and Sub-Regional boundaries were announced by the Government in January 1973. It was not possible to draw boundaries compatible with every peacetime grouping but an attempt was made to remove earlier inconsistencies without introducing too many changes in the pattern of the regions. The new groupings, which took effect on 1 April 1974, provide for a reduced total of 10 Regions and 17 Sub-Regions as follows:

Region	Sub-Region	Counties
1 North	11	Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland, Tyne and Wear.
2 Yorkshire	21	Humberside, North, West and South Yorkshire.
3 East Midlands	31	Derbyshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire.
	32	Leicestershire, Northamptonshire.
4 East	41	Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, Suffolk.
	42	Bedfordshire, Essex, Hertfordshire.
5 Greater London	51	Greater London.
6 South East	61	Kent, Surrey, East and West Sussex.
	62	Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Hampshire, Isle of Wight, Oxfordshire.
7 South West	71	Avon, Dorset, Gloucestershire, Somerset, Wiltshire.
	72	Cornwall, Devon.
8 Wales	81	Clwyd, Gwynedd.
	82	Dyfed, Mid, South and West Glamorgan, Gwent, Powys.
9 West Midlands	91	West Midlands, Staffordshire, Warwickshire.
	92	Hereford and Worcester, Salop.
10 North West	101	Cumbria, Lancashire.
	102	Cheshire, Greater Manchester, Merseyside.

Review by A. C. BUSHNELL, MChemA, FRIC
County Analyst, Lancashire

As the 20th century passed its three quarters mark, and I realised that I had spent thirty-eight years associated with Consumer Protection, I could not help reflecting that at the onset I had imagined that the world I entered, so long ago, had been there for ever. I remember having been astounded to learn that, at the time of Britain's first Act for Preventing the Adulteration of Articles of Food and Drink, in 1860, the American slaves had not yet been freed, most of the hymns we sing in church were only just being written (indeed--most of the town churches were only just being built and their cemeteries only just being laid out for profit) and most of the professional bodies, which in my youth had seemed so durable, were only just in the process of being formed. Perhaps, therefore, it was not only in the field of Consumer Protection that one found evidence of disillusion in 1975. Past versions of these annual Municipal Year Book articles have said: "There is too much legislation".

In 1975 there was not a great deal of consumer legislation which contained new standards, but the amount of paper which circulated as a consequence of Common Market matters was a major contribution to the difficulties of local government. Meanwhile nothing about the Common Market had shown any concern for the Consumer. In a world where the people of Ethiopia starved, the Common Market allowed milk powder to rot. It had cost £36 millions to accumulate it. Subsidies which would ensure its use in animal foods would have cost another £170 millions. The Common Market apple crop was allowed to rot. In the first quarter of the year fraudulent extraction of money from the Brussels Farm Fund, for food trade transactions between Common Market member states, for export subsidy and intervention payments, amounted to half a million pounds. And so on, and so on.

Something very strange is going on, and the consumer is not receiving any consideration whatsoever! . . . . so one is grateful for the opportunity to ask questions about what that something is, even in a place like Municipal Year Book. An important aspect of the question is, are we really being looked after in the food field? In 1975 in Lancashire, the laboratory received a consumer's complaint about hairs in a chicken and mushroom pie. They proved to be chicken hairs, and the manufacturer was advised to flame the chicken carcases he used before cooking them. His reply was that he no longer had such reliable suppliers of chicken skins as formerly, and they sometimes did come through with a substantial covering of hairs. Did you know that chicken pies were made from chicken skins?

Similarly there is an ominous little warning in the Food Standards Committee Report on Novel Proteins in Food, which was published in 1975. This occurred in paragraphs 54 and 77 where they refer to possible future sources of protein foods being lower animals, recycled waste, etc! It looks as if the committee already knows what Dr. L. S. Henderson-Smith meant when he was reported on 12 August 1973 as saying (when advocating the reprocessing of corpses): "Cremation is a gross waste of valuable resources. The human body has an important place in the ecology of nature which we interfere with every time we send it into the flames". What else can that 'etc.' mean when listed following 'recycled waste'?

A Pan Paperback book called, "Not All in the Mind" by Dr. Richard Mackarness, of Park Prewett Hospital, Hants, has suggested that some of people's general feelings of malaise which made a fortune for patent medicine manufacturers of the past, may, in fact, be allergic response to various foodstuffs. It is a rare chemist who sets much store by food-fad theories, but the book does just make one wonder whether it really is only one's old age which now makes bread seem so indigestible. Bread is not, after all, the same thing that was eaten forty years ago. In the Chorleywood process there is no digestion with yeast and the bakers have admitted that their spongy loaf is achieved by undercooking. Once upon a time, if you found yourself with indigestion after eating spongy bread, you could go and buy a competitor's product. Now the consumer must ask experts for an opinion . . . . and what do we find of experts? . . . . that no one knows what he is talking about any more.

When I advertise for laboratory staff these days, I get a short list of qualified chemists who cannot analyse. The universities stopped teaching analysis a long time ago, because no one who filtered back to teach in university knew how to analyse. In my early days of working in a university medical school, all the practical work was done by people called Laboratory Stewards. They cut sections, prepared slides, and stained bacteria . . . . and the people who eventually acquired medical degrees never learned how to do these things. I remember with what bitterness a newly qualified engineer told of the first footbridge he designed, with all the strengths carefully calculated. The head of his firm looked at it and said: "That's fine now do it over, doubling everything". Experience, alas, does not come out of a book as so many people imagine today, but because so few people know this, we find 'expert' pronouncements made about lead in food, for example, by men from the Ministry. Another inspector whose article appeared in Local Government Review for 19 April 1975 said that inspectors could do analysis more cheaply than the analysts. No doubt they are influenced by television pictures of Mediterranean mussels being examined for lead by an Atomic Absorption method which could not possibly give the correct answer. It could only have given comparative values which might have been sufficient for the research being described, but we have reached a stage where self-appointed experts do not know the depth of their ignorance, and we had Ministry men asking for lead results to limits which could only have been achieved with apparatus which analysts' departments were not permitted to buy, and with a staff allocation which no management team would currently allow. Nevertheless a gesture had to be made, and a MAFF Food Standards Committee Report issued late in December recommended that in general the maximum permitted levels for lead in food should be halved . . . . Where is the money coming from to enforce this? Will the unknowing powers accept that inspectors can do the testing free?

Next the Ministry men shewed their ignorance and their unconcern with the consumer, when, under pressure from the Milk Marketing Board, they sought to curb analysts' complaints about sediment in milk. The analysts shewed that existing literature, including the Ministry's own, stated that normal milk contained no more than 100,000 cells from pus, etc., per cubic centimetre of milk. At that, the Ministry men spoke of re-writing the books to shew the normal count as half a million, because of the current incidence of sub-clinical mastitis which had led to the extensive topical use of penicillin on cows' udders, causing so much controversy a decade ago.

Among new standards, we had SI 1975 No. 1486, "The Emulsifiers and Stabilisers in Food Regulations 1975". When, in desperation, the Government Laboratory was approached for methods of analysis to enforce the regulations, that body had to reply that there were none, and that in the present financial situation there were unlikely to be any for some time to come.

All right . . . . perhaps Britain is in decline, and these are examples of decadence. What happens when we look at the EEC?

We find proposed methods of analysis being circulated which do not work. We find processes calling for reagents which cannot be obtained. We find recommended laboratory handling processes which imply a total lack of familiarity with laboratory manipulation . . . what is more, we find suggestions for standards which indicate a complete lack of familiarity with the subjects under discussion. Thus, in 1975, there were circulated for comment some draft standards for infant foods. They included a quantitative limit for particles of mould . . . .but anybody who has done mould counts knows how easily mould fragments break into smaller fragments. So the standard had no meaning. Having been made critical by the one anomaly, one found oneself looking questioningly at the standards for bacteria. These proved to be process control standards, quite unenforceable as food standards. So the question was put: If you have unenforceable standards, will this not bring all food law into disrepute? There was no answer.

Much of the trouble with consumerism is that it has become synonymous with 'The Best Buy'—i.e. the cheapest commodity. The two are not identical. That this has become waffle on the food front was underlined by a report into the content of American dustbins in 1975, which showed that Mr. American Everyman was throwing away twenty-five per cent of the food he bought. In terms of feeding value he had bought the food very dearly, and in 1975 some papers were at pains to show how costly, in terms of grain as well as in terms of money, it was to eat meat. Despite all this profligacy there were serious attempts to assess in 1975 some different methods of giving nutritional information on the packets of such foods as fish fingers, 'so that the housewife should know that she was feeding her family adequately'. The upshot was that the average housewife was found not to understand the American system, (which resembles our own labelling of Food Regulations' directions for the labelling of vitamin foods, slimming foods and diabetic foods). She was indifferent to a bald statement of how many grams of nutrient were in each portion, and she showed least apathy to pictorial representations of equivalence between foods with which she was familiar. Despite this reaction, and the fact that an HMSO ARC/MRC Report on Food and Nutrition Research last year stated that far too little is known about nutrition (and that sugar is not 'bad for you'), Nutritional Labelling will increase the cost of prepacked food, so one can confidently expect it to be with us soon.

Last year too, Dr. Magnus Pyke, whose exuberance is enjoyed only because he is always right, was saying that in Britain the housewife throws away twenty per cent of all the food she buys. No wonder the government's local food price surveys were described in the Sunday Times as the "latest brainstorm". No one is really concerned to bring food prices down. No one is concerned to feed the faint and hungry (who form no less than two-thirds of the world's population). No one is in the slightest way concerned about inflation. Some of this airy unconcern about sums of money involving so many noughts would be welcomed by public analysts' departments, but cash flow is clogged in these outer fringes of local government by the legal wrangles of the half million appeals to the Land Tribunal, which is the smoke screen behind which commercial and industrial firms are adding to inflation by non-payment of rates, with the consequent high interest loan burden that this throws upon local authorities. However, at the end of the 1974 report on 'Date Marking of Food' we were told that Datemarking would add to food costs. But arrangements for open date marking are still progressing, as evidenced by the Interim Report of the Steering Group on Food Freshness, which was issued in March. We may therefore take it that we shall soon get nutritional labelling and microbiological standards for foods as well, despite the estimate that such standards would result in the discarding of about 16,000 tons of perfectly edible food each year in Great Britain.

Sadly, the sorry story is occurring on a world scale, and perhaps all the people involved, even those local government people who add to inflation by knocking down perfectly good houses and replacing them with costly ones which blow away in high winds, are all trying their best to cope with it all. All one can make is a personal expression of disbelief in avowed concern about inflation and the consumer.

The 1975 evidence of effort in the consumer field, as it affects food etc., included the documents quoted already in this article, together with the following ones:

SI 1975 No. 1484 The Fluorine in Food (Amendment) Regulations 1975
SI 1975 No. 1485 The Miscellaneous Additives in Food (Amendment) Regulations 1975
SI 1975 No. 1486 The Emulsifiers and Stabilisers in Food Regulations 1975
SI 1975 No. 1487 The Preservatives in Food Regulations 1975
SI 1975 No. 1488 The Colouring Matter in Food (Amendment) Regulations 1975
SI 1975 No. 292 The Common Agricultural Policy (Wine) (Amendment) Regulations 1975
SI 1975 No. 1241 The Glazed Ceramic Ware (Safety) Regulations 1975
SI 1975 No. 1366 The Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1975 to be read with Department of Prices and Consumer Protection booklet "Administrative Guidance on the Electric Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1975".
SI 1975 No. 928 The Textile Products (Indication of Fibre Content) (Amendment) Regulations 1975
Department of the Environment. "The Purification of Swimming Pools".
Department of the Environment. "Report of the Coastal Pollution Research Committee of the Water Pollution Research Laboratory".

Besides the Commencement (No. 3) Order to the Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act, there were six statutory instruments connected with Health and Safety (seven if one counts the Commencement Order for the Sex Discrimination Act 1975).

Packaging in metric units and the abbreviations which may be used to indicate weights and measures produced only four Weights and Measures Orders, but registration fees for trade marks were increased by the Trade Marks (Amendment No. 2) and (Amendment No. 3) Rules. Prices were also increased by The Blood Tests (Evidence of Paternity) (Amendment) Regulations, The Coroners (Fees and Allowances) Rules, The Bread Prices (Amendment) Order, The Cheese Prices (No. 2) (Amendment) Order, The Butter Prices (Amendment) (No. 2) Order and The Meat Inspection (Amendment) Regulations.

The Household Flour (Prices) Order 1975, The Price Marking (Fruit and Vegetables) Order and the Price Marking (Drinks on Premises) Order all required prices to be displayed.

The Provision of Milk and Meals (Amendment No. 2) Regulations subjected parents whose children sought reduced charges for school meals in local authority schools to a means test, and the Welfare Food Order 1975 removed any right to purchase National Dried Milk or Vitamin preparations if supplies were not available.''

EEC Draft Proposals seem now to be as grains of sand upon the shore, so anybody's list is likely to be incomplete. Certainly interest was shown in Britain in one relating to materials likely to come into contact with food, paralleled in the U.K. by a FACC Report on the Leaching of Substances from Packaging Materials into Foods, another on edible fats, one on the migration of lead and cadmium from food vessels made from ceramics, one dealing with erucic acid in edible fats and one on edible starches. Another draft dealt with additives in animal feeding stuffs, and there were two on proposed standards for water.

There were a number of announcements.

The Food Standards Committee said that it would review food labelling, the question of water in food, the dovetailing of EEC legislation about fruit juices with United Kingdom law, meat product regulations and yoghurt.

The Food Additives and Contaminants Committee expressed interest in antioxidants, solvents used in food preparation, arsenic in food, the use of sorbic acid preservative, of mineral hydrocarbons, and of course, lead.

EEC harmonization gave rise to proposals for regulations for honey, chocolate, and for sugar products. There was also a proposal for the further adulteration of soft drinks with saccharin, this time to permit unlimited quantities of saccharin in soft drinks intended for dilution provided that the small print tells the purchaser how much the drink needs to be diluted to make the final drink comply with the limits for saccharin in a drink intended for direct consumption. There was also a notice which said that vinegar manufacturers were going to adopt the EEC standard of 6 per cent acetic acid for wine vinegar, but would require until 1 January 1977 for existing stocks to clear from the distribution chains.

Warnings were given that regulations would probably be in operation by April 1976 to enable enforcement of the Medicines Act, as it applied to animal feeding stuffs, to go ahead.

There were other miscellaneous documents which referred to the consumer, such as a booklet by the Consumer Protection Advisory Committee called RIGHTS OF CONSUMERS, which concerned transactions. The WHO put out Technical Report 574 on "Pesticide Residues in Food" and the APA "Joint Survey of Pesticide Residues in Foodstuffs Sold in England and Wales in 1972" was at last published. The Office of Fair Trading distributed a consultative document called "Review of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968" and LAJAC began to explore the possibilities of a Nationally Co-ordinated Sampling Scheme. Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road received attention initiated from Derbyshire, which favoured the clear HASCHEM coding, and a Department of the Environment translation was circulated of an amendment to the 1974 Edition of the European Agreement Concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road.

It was all go in 1975, but the local authorities were engaged in another phase of that economy drive which I have experienced for the past 38 years. 1975 was also International Women's Year, Architectural Heritage Year, Age Concern Year and Farm Safety Year.

FOOD ADDITIVES AND CONTAMINANTS COMMITTEE

The Food Additives and Contaminants Committee advises the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Social Services, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Head of the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland on matters relating to food contaminants, additives and similar substances which are, or may be, present in food or used in its preparation, with particular reference to the exercise of powers on Ministers by sections 4, 5 and 7 of the Food and Drugs Act 1955 and the corresponding provisions in enactments relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland.

NATIONAL GAS CONSUMERS' COUNCIL

Estate Hse., 130 Jermyn St., London SW1Y 4UL (01-930 7431/4)

The National Council works in the interests of gas consumers generally, dealing directly with the British Gas Corporation and the Government on policies concerning the supply of gas, tariffs, gas fittings and appliances, servicing and any other matter of crucial importance to gas users.

The Council was set up on 1st January 1973, under the provisions of the Gas Act, 1972. The Secretary of State for Energy appointed Baroness Macleod of Borve, J.P., as Chairman and Sir Mark Henig as Deputy Chairman. The Membership was formed by the appointment of the 12 Chairmen of the Regional Gas Consumers' Councils and 12 members chosen for their particular experience and background. Other members may be appointed as required.

Chairman: Baroness Macleod of Borve, JP; Deputy Chairman: Sir Mark Henig; Director: J. H. Evans, IPFA.

National Council Members: E. Fallon, BSc, MIEE, CEng; Miss E. Fanshawe, MBAOT; Coun. Mrs. M. M. Gerold; Mrs. D. Lambie, JP; The Rt. Hon. The Earl of Lanesborough, TD, DL, JP; L. J. Tivey, BSc(Econ.); Mrs. E. M. Wigley; Coun. Mrs. B. Williams; P. Worthington, BSc. (all appointed by the Secretary of State) and the twelve Regional Chairmen below.

CHAIRMEN AND SECRETARIES OF REGIONAL GAS CONSUMERS' COUNCILS

Twelve Regional Gas Consumers' Councils, which replaced the Gas Consultative Councils, were also set up by the Gas Act, 1972, corresponding to the Regions of British Gas. Each Council, appointed by Parliament, consists of approximately 30 members who are nominated by local authorities, commerce, trades unions and other organizations. The Regional Councils take up representations on behalf of the gas consumer if a first approach to the British Gas region does not resolve the issue. Names and addresses of local committee members of Regional Gas Consumers' Councils are available in local Gas Showrooms.

Scottish Gas Consumers' Council: 86 George St., Edinburgh, EH2 3BU (031-226 6523); Chairman: Mrs. I. O. Stewart, OBE, JP; Secretary: Miss Y. Wilson.

Northern Gas Consumers' Council: 18 Fawcett St., Sunderland, Tyne and Wear, SR1 1RH (0783 74272/74801); Chairman: J. Hudson; Secretary: Mrs. M. Watson.

TRADING STANDARDS

Review by J. J. CORFIELD, MITSA

Information Officer of the Institute of Trading Standards Administration

Some 760 years have elapsed since the inception of consumer protection, the original ideas, amongst them, 'There shall be one measure of ale throughout the Land'', being just one, were laid down in the Magna Carta signed and sealed, under much pressure, at Runnymede by King John. 760 years is a long time for consumerism to develop, most major developments undoubtedly coming within the last 10 to 15 years, with Local Authorities taking an increasingly active part in this development. Whilst the Weights and Measures and Food and Drugs Acts have protected the consumer for many years now, 'caveat emptor' or 'buyer beware' has been the general rule; modern legislation however seeks to inform and assist the consumer in making his purchases. Much of this legislation, some of it even burdensome, protects not only the consumer but the legitimate trader ensuring fair competition and higher trading practices. That trading practices have been improved over the last few years is beyond doubt and much of the credit for this success must go to the Local Authorities and in particular to the Trading Standards/Consumer Protection Departments, whose job it has been effectively to enforce the legislation brought about by consumer and trade pressures.

Local Government reorganization in 1974 achieved—in the main, exceptions being some London Authorities—a unified service, co-ordinating the administration of a specified range of trading standards and consumer protection legislation, under the Trading Standards/Consumer Protection Departments (formerly Weights and Measures) to the mutual advantage of the consumer, trade and industry. Indeed, prior to reorganization the multivarious officer disciplines engaged in enforcing some of the functions made nonsense of any attempt to attain uniform efficient standards, created communication difficulties, made adequate training non-existent and sometimes insurmountable difficulties were created for the trading community in preparing and producing goods for national distribution, complying with dissimilar interpretations of legal requirements in different parts of the country.

Administration of the service is the responsibility of—(a) in England, 6 Metropolitan Counties (MC in table below), 39 County Councils (NMC), and 23 London Authorities or Consortiums (LB).
(b) in Wales, 8 Welsh Counties (CW), and
(c) in Scotland, 9 Scottish Regional Councils (SR) and 3 Island Councils (SI) making a total of 88 authorities compared with 241 prior to reorganization.

The service provided varies between Local Authorities but generally the work of most Trading Standards/Consumer Protection Departments can be broadly divided into five main areas of responsibility, Quantity and Metrology, Quality, Performance and Service, Safety and Licensing, Credit Facilities and Price Information, and Information and Advice.

Metrology and Quantity Controls

For many years Weights and Measures law has limited the range of weights and measures units, and the denomination of physical weights and measures which can be used for trading purposes, and it has applied a tight system of supervisory control over the design, construction and accuracy of a wide range of weighing and measuring equipment in use for trade. These controls are aimed at providing a balance of equity between buyer and seller in transactions made by reference to quantity and the current universal acceptance by all sides of the correctness of weighing equipment in trade use is ample testimony to the success of this control policy and to the way it has been enforced by Trading Standards Officers over the years. Such controls also make it an offence to give short weight, measure or number in transactions for the sale of goods.

The enforcement of the Weights and Measures Act, 1963—the main instrument of control—and the voluminous regulations made for effective control is one of the major functions of consumer protection and is the basis for the maintenance of standards of quantity which are just as essential to the trading community as to the consumer.

Unfortunately, because of the pressure of other duties and increased consumer protection legislation being placed upon local Weights and Measures authorities, the amount of work carried out under the Weights and Measures Act has decreased, e.g. visits to trading premises for the year ending March 1975, 450,053 against 704,174 in 1971/72. The decline in preventative work is regretted.

Whilst it would be wrong to draw too many conclusions from figures published by the Institute of Trading Standards Administration for the year 1975 it it nevertheless worth highlighting at least two categories of commodities in which the percentage incorrect were found to be dramatically increased, e.g.:

Meat, fish and poultry in 1972, 1,729,520 examined of which 2·20% were incorrect. In 1974/75 470,910 were examined of which 9·21% were found incorrect, likewise bags of solid fuel 511,599 examined in 1971/72, of which 4% were incorrect whilst in 1974/75 75,442 were examined 12.32% being found incorrect.

It is generally felt that the high standard of inspection that existed prior to April 1974 has prevented drastic reductions in Trading Standards in the short term. On a longer term the reduction in Inspector/Trader contact, particularly in relation to the Inspector's advisory role, will result in a general lowering of standards and increase in complaints. Metrication progress has been slow, although a number of industries have completed the changeover. More recently legislation has been introduced to control the sale of certain commodities, including foods, in metric terms. However, the original impetus of some 5 or 6 years ago, regrettably appears to be lost. Legislation towards full metrication is anticipated.

E.E.C. legislation and directives have continued to build up in a programme of harmonization of U.K. legislation to that of the Common Market countries and a Government Working Party is studying the metrological control of pre-packed articles and it is likely that statistical control on an average weight principle will evolve.

Quality Control

Quality of merchandise is just as important to a contract as quantity or price. This generalized heading broadly covers commodities of both food and non-food varieties under the Trade Descriptions Act and the Food and Drugs Act.

Food and Drugs legislation seeks to control the standard, composition, purity and accuracy of description of human foods and food products. These controls have two basic objectives, to safeguard the public against the hazards of unfit, unclean, contaminated or adulterated food and to protect the public from the economic aspects, in terms of 'value for money spent' which can accrue as a consequence of false or misleading statements about, or false or deceptive descriptions of, food generally. Many basic foods are required to conform to standard specifications and in an age when food products are becoming increasingly sophisticated in composition and presentation, effective enforcement of these standards is of considerable importance. For the year ended March 1975, 152,275 articles of food were submitted to chemical analysis or test, of which some 5·4% were the subject of adverse reports.

Legislation also controls quality and effectiveness of animal feeding stuffs and fertilizers, for example it is necessary for such commodities to bear the statement of quality and medicinal and other additives. Of the total animal feeding stuffs submitted for analysis, some 16·33% failed to comply one way or another with the provisions of the legislation and nearly 13% of fertilizers submitted did not comply. Controls under the Hallmarking Act, 1973, deal with the composition, assaying, marking and description of articles made of precious metals.

The Trade Descriptions Act 1968 enforcement continues to be largely a matter of dealing with complaints from the public and trade organizations and it is probably true to say that the bulk of trading standards officers' time is still taken up in investigating such complaints. Controls in the form of the Trade Descriptions Act prohibit the misdescription of goods or the making of false or reckless statements about services during the course of the trade transaction. This Act is at present under review, the review committee's initial conclusion being that by and large the Act achieved its objective, clearly raising the standard of truthfulness in describing goods and services. The continuing high level of prosecutions, 2,447 in England and Wales for the year ending March 1975 with fines and costs of £118,835, suggests that sustained vigilance is still required by the Trading Standards Officers and the well-timed review will result in an even more effective piece of consumer protection legislation in the future.

Safety and Licensing Controls

Such controls include, among other things, the sale and storage of petroleum products, poisons, explosives and cinematrograph film; the safety of toys, nightdresses, electric blankets, fireguards, oil heaters and other goods. One of the latest in this field imposes restrictions in relation to paint which may be used on, and substances which may be used in, toys, pencils and graphic instruments. Other controls under this heading include that of animal importation, the keeping of proper animal movement records, licensing and the processing of waste food. Under the Road Traffic Act, controls cover motor cycle helmets, overloading of heavy goods vehicles and the sale of unroadworthy vehicles; all contribute to public safety.

New safety regulations control the sale of children's anoraks and outer garments containing hood cords, also new regulations require safer household electrical equipment, and limit lead and cadmium in tableware. Further regulations are to be made relating to stability, efficiency of brakes, safety harness attachments, and adequacy of locking devices on folding perambulators and pushchairs whilst under a Government Green Paper proposals have been put forward for consideration to strengthen the Consumer Protection Act, 1961. It is pleasing to record that, possibly due to increased publicity on the dangers, firework injuries in 1975 were 18% down on the previous year to the lowest level since records were first kept in 1962 and serious injuries were down by 29%. Tighter controls by the Government are envisaged in the future particularly in respect to the "banger" and "fly about" types of firework.

Consumer Credit Facilities and Price Information

Price Regulations, together with prohibition of the giving of false or misleading indications as to the price of goods, provides the consumer with increased protection. Trading Standards Officers have been involved with the enforcement of the Prices Act 1974—which contains stiff penalties with up to £400 for contravention—and a number of orders controlling prices of such commodities as butter, cheese, bread, etc. Credit facilities are also the subject of controls which include a new licensing system for traders providing credit, and are designed to give greater protection to borrowers. Such controls are contained in the Consumer Credit Act of 1974. An Act to establish for the protection of consumers a new system of licensing and other control of traders concerned with the provision of credit or the supply of goods on hire or hire purchase and their transaction in place of the present enactments regulating money-lenders, pawnbrokers and hire purchase traders and their transactions. It is an offence to carry on in the business of debt adjusting, debt counselling, debt collecting or operating a credit reference agency without a licence issued by the Office of Fair Trading. Licences for other forms of consumer credit business will be introduced in the next two years. The "seeking business" provisions of the Act are in the course of being brought into effect, these include the advertising regulations, often referred to as the "truth in lending" provisions. Following full implementation of the Act and Regulations, consumers will be able to shop around for credit and compare like with like and choose that form of credit most suitable for their particular need.

Trading Standards Officers have a substantial part to play in the enforcement, consultation on licensing applications, inspections, handling of complaints from, and giving advice to, consumers.

A detailed training programme has been taking place to meet the enforcement needs of this important reform in the huge complex field of consumer credit law, this legislation having undoubted benefits not only to the consumer but to the credit industry too.

A more recent innovation giving consumers prices information is that of local price surveys being carried out, some by the Local Authorities under a Department of Prices and Consumer Protection scheme. Over 280 such schemes throughout the country have been approved.

Enforcement and/or Advice

The enforcement of these laws is, of course, the first objective of the service. At one time it was considered sufficient if officers simply detected offences and then prosecuted the offenders before the Court. In recent years a more enlightened attitude towards enforcement has developed, which, while retaining prosecutions as a final sanction against recalcitrant offenders, recognizes that the majority of offences against standards legislation are committed either through misunderstanding or misinterpretation of complex laws or through carelessness. The trend is now to offer counsel and advice to traders and to manufacturers to prevent offences being committed in cases when offences have already occurred; to issue warnings, usually with a time limit attached for the offender to come into line with the law. Nevertheless situations do occur where it is necessary to institute legal proceedings. In general every effort is made to protect the consumer and protect the goodwill of the trader or manufacturer. For these reasons a great deal of the success of the service depends upon the maintenance of mutual respect and a good relationship between its officers and the traders.

Probably one of the most important areas of development within Local Authorities has been in communications, the very desirous need to keep the community informed of the Local Authority activities. The Local Government Act of 1972 enables local Weights and Measures Authorities to provide or contribute towards a consumer advice service in their area to inform the consumer of his rights, give pre-shopping information and ensure a service for complaints about goods and services. A Government grant scheme means that there will be an increased number of such advice centres operating in the next 12 months. At least 75 consumer advice centres have already been set up by Local Authorities and within the next year the Government grant will bring the number of centres to over 120, establishing a network of such centres throughout the country. In most instances advice centres have been situated within large shopping areas; however, in several authorities mobile advice centres visit, at pre-arranged times, a county's smaller market towns and villages, much on the lines of the now well-established mobile libraries.

The increase in the amount of legislation and demands for advice make consumers more aware of their rights and provision of easier opportunities to bring complaints etc. has resulted in several changes in the pattern of administration. Particularly highlighted in the latest statistics for England and Wales, are those in respect of the consumer advisory service, for in 1972 only 20,443 complaints were received from the public against in 1975 227,902 complaints being received, an increase of 207,459. There was also an increase of 788,980 requests for advice.

Education, Training and Recruitment

The Institute of Trading Standards Administration, the professional organization for officers of the service, aims to advance the legal, technical, scientific, practical and general knowledge of persons engaged in the administration of legislation relative to fair trading, consumer protection and advice to consumers and traders. It has always played a major part in the training programmes for qualification, and in recent years has sponsored most post-qualification training courses. It has been particularly active over the last two years, organizing courses and training programmes for officers meeting the enforcement needs of all the new legislation placed on the service, and also training those officers who, because of reorganization, were faced with additional legislation to enforce. A great deal of progress has been made in the training of personnel in the advisory role.

Most authorities are now recruiting a mixed entry of graduates and non-graduates as trainees. A graduate with a good degree in a discipline with some relevance to the studies to be undertaken stands the best chance of passing the necessary examinations in reasonable time.

The Diploma in Trading Standards is a comprehensive qualification covering the majority of work undertaken in Trading Standards Departments. It includes within it the statutory qualification which is required before anyone can act as an inspector of Weights and Measures. It is a two-part examination and the first part must be obtained before the second can be attempted. The subjects include a detailed consideration of both criminal and civil law relating to consumer protection, metrology and the techology relating to goods and services commonly supplied to consumers, statistics, trading practices, practical aspects of enforcement and the provision of advice. The examination includes practical work, the submission of an extended essay on a project and an oral examination.

A secondary qualification is the Diploma in Consumer Affairs, this is also a two-part examination and covers consumer protection law, the basis of trading within the community, the problems likely to arise from purchases, the way in which consumer protection is through statutory and voluntary bodies, standards of trading and advertising and the problems and practice of giving consumer advice.

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF FAIR TRADING

John Methven, MA, LLB,
Chancery Hse., 53 Chancery La., London, WC2A 1SP (01-242 2858)

The Director General of Fair Trading is appointed under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to keep under review the carrying on of commercial activities in the UK, and has his own small staff and organization—the Office of Fair Trading—which was set up in November 1973. The Director General initiates action on unfair trading practices in general and against the individual unfair traders, makes references of monopolies to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, encourages trade associations to adopt and publish voluntary codes of practice, and himself publishes material to inform and educate consumers. He is the adviser to the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection on proposed mergers, and carries out the duties of the former Registrar of Restrictive Trade Practices.

Under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 the Director General has set up and administers a licensing system for businesses involved in consumer credit and hire transactions and generally superintends the working and enforcement of the Act and regulations made under it.

CONSUMER ADVICE CENTRES

In paragraph 32 of the White Paper "The Attack on Inflation" (Cmnd. 6151) the Government announced its intention to encourage the establishment of more Consumer Advice Centres by local authorities in order to expand this service to consumers and retailers alike, particularly in main shopping areas. These Centres would normally be staffed by trained consumer advisers and would usually be linked to the local authority's Trading Standards Department. Services offered include information and display lists about local prices, pre-shopping advice, help with all kinds of consumer problems, advice about consumers' rights and consumer education.

By way of expanding the service, towards the end of 1975 the Government made available additional finance totalling £1·4 m. This sum of money was to be used for the setting up of approved new centres and for running expenses up to March, 1977. The grant per project was limited to £50,000, and the running costs to £30,000 per annum. In the event applications for this grant money from local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales together exceeded the sum made available by the Government, and ultimately the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection selected 49 new projects on the basis of thier suitability and location to serve a total population of 9·9 million. These are—

As to Scotland, the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection have indicated that the Lothian Regional Council has arranged for the Citizens' Advice Bureau in Edinburgh to provide consumer advice. The Strathclyde Regional Council has consumer advice centres in Greenock and East Kilbride and is opening further centres in Glasgow and Paisley. The Department is providing grants for the opening of more centres in the areas of both these Regional Councils. Advice on consumer matters is also provided by other Scottish local authorities through their Trading Standards Departments and, in particular, the Highland Regional Council operates four advice centres through their Director of Consumer Protection. In Aberdeen, the City Council's Public Relations Officer is responsible for the management of an advice centre.

MUSEUMS AND GALLERIES 1975–6

Review contributed by THE MUSEUMS ASSOCIATION

Future provision and patronage for the arts, including museums and galleries, has been the subject of various enquiries during the year under review. Lord Redcliffe-Maud completed his survey on Future Support for the Arts on behalf of the Gulbenkian Foundation and his report will be published in May 1976. Mr Harold Lever, M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, also undertook an enquiry at the invitation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Harold Wilson) during the winter 1975/6.

The political parties have been preparing their policy towards the arts, museums and galleries. In September 1975, the Labour Party issued a pamphlet: The Arts (Transport House, 20p) as a preliminary discussion paper. This recommended a separate Ministry for Arts, Communication and Entertainment, the formation of a National Council for the Arts and Entertainment and regional councils with an increased representation from local authorities and co-opted, voting members representing entertainment unions, management and other relevant bodies. The paper also recommends a minimum mandatory rate of 0·50p which local authorities should spend on the arts. For the Conservative Party, Mr Norman St. John Stevas, M.P., has set up a number of working parties to prepare reports on different aspects of the arts. At the 1976 annual conference of the Museums Association, Mrs Renee Short, M.P., Chairman of the Labour Party Study Group, and Mr Robert Cooke, M.P., Chairman of the Conservative Parliamentary Party Arts and Amenities Group, will be speaking in the opening session on the theme: Future Support for the Arts.

In March 1976 the Minister for the Arts (Mr. Hugh Jenkins, M.P.), announced the formation of an independent organization to facilitate business and industrial sponsorship of the arts.

This activity underlines the concern generally felt for the maintenance of arts provision during a period of rapid inflation and when restrictions in national and local government expenditure have highlighted the need for wide-based financial aid to cultural concerns. The increases in voluntary and community involvement are another significant trend. A number of museums, particularly the newer museums concerned with open air or in situ preservation, such as Beamish, Ironbridge, Gladstone Pottery Museum and the Weald & Downland Museum, rely heavily on volunteer helpers and have appointed special members of staff to supervise them. European Architectural Heritage Year and its projects also indicated how much could be undertaken through local enthusiasm and involvement towards the conservation of our historic environment. Several museums were included in the schemes receiving Heritage Year awards or special commendations (see report on Heritage Year Awards, obtainable from the Civic Trust Publications Department, 17 Carlton House Terrace, London SW1Y 5AW, price £3·50, p & p 50p). National Heritage continues to run its Museum of the Year Award under the sponsorship of the Illustrated London News and the 1975 winners were: 1st prize and Henry Moore trophy to the Weald & Downland Museum, Singleton, Sussex, 2nd prize jointly to the Green Howards Regimental Museum, Richmond, Yorkshire and the Brecknock Museum, Wales, runner-up being HMS Belfast, London. The £1,000 award for conservation work, sponsored by the British Antique Dealers Association, was made to St. Nicholas Church Museum, Bristol, and the award for the most enterprising publication programme was won by the Wygston's House Museum of Costume in Leicester.

The Development of Tourism Act 1969 empowered the national Tourist Boards to make grants or loans towards projects for encouraging tourism and funds are also available for encouraging employment in tourism in development areas. Various museum projects are being assisted under this policy and decisions are normally made in consultation with the appropriate Area Museum Council. The Countryside Commission has also contributed grants towards a number of museum schemes in the countryside. Many museum schemes are listed in the second part of the Guide to Countryside Interpretation (Part 2: Interpretive Media and Facilities), a joint publication with the Scottish Countryside Commission (HMSO, 1975). The Countryside Commission, at the invitation of the Museums Association, organized a special 5-day course on interpretation with a museum bias at Bowness on Windermere from 10–14 May 1976 and a similar course was arranged by the Council for Museums & Galleries in Scotland and the Scottish Countryside Commission in April, 1976. With the aid of a grant from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust, the Museum Association held a preliminary meeting and two subsequent week-end seminars on museums and interpretive techniques and museum staff have participated in other meetings organized by bodies worked in allied fields, the Society for the Interpretation of Britain's Heritage, National Parks, the Institute of Advanced Architectural Studies of York University, etc.

The Carnegie U.K. Trust, having supported museums and galleries for over 40 years, finally terminated its special policy of grant aid administered through a Joint Committee with the Museums Association in December 1975. This involvement, like the Trust's earlier support for libraries, has been of great encouragement and assistance to museums throughout the United Kingdom and the two major reports it commissioned on the Museums and Galleries of the British Isles (other than the National museums) by Sir Henry Miers and S. F. Markham (1928 and 1938 respectively) are still essential reading for students of museum developments in this country.

There has been considerable discussion during the year about the role of museums as environmental record centres. A preliminary paper was prepared jointly by the Society of County Planning Officers and the Society of County Museum Directors for submission to the Association of County Councils and discussions have also been held by the various specialist groups affiliated to the Museums Association—the Geological Curators Group, the Biological Curators Group and the Society of Museum Archaeologists—on the disciplinary implications. The part played by museums in rescue archaeology, particularly the after-care, storage and display of excavated material, was fully considered at a meeting called by the Standing Commission on Museums & Galleries attended by representatives of the Department of the Environment, the Ancient Monuments Board for England, Committee for Rescue Archaeology, the Museums Association and the International Institute of Conservation (UK Group). A resultant memorandum to the Department of Education and Science urged the need for support for training facilities for the conservation of archaeological material and for its after-care but received a reply stating that responsibility must lie with the Department of the Environment and local museums. Further negotiations are continuing.

Following final tests, the Museums Association launched its IRGMA recording system and the record cards and instruction manuals have been ordered by many more museums than had initially been anticipated. Collaboration with the IRGMA scheme was recommended for the computerized recording of archaeological data in the Department of the Environment report Principles of Publication in Rescue Archaeology (October, 1975) and discussions are taking place with other bodies working in allied fields.

In May 1975, the Standing Commission on Museums & Galleries set up a Working Party on a National Plan for Museums under the chairmanship of Sir Arthur Drew with the following terms of reference: "To continue the work already begun by the Commission on the designation of proposed 'centres of excellence' and, with the advice from Area Museum Councils and local authority, university and private museum authorities to produce a preliminary plan for a national system of museum services as envisaged in Chapter 12 of the Department of Education and Science Report on Provincial Museums and Galleries (the Wright Report, HMSO 1973)". Detailed information has been sought from the Area Museum Councils on a preliminary selection of museums and on additional museums and galleries, or groups of museums, which the Area Councils might wish to recommend. Evidence is being invited from the local authority associations and other organizations.

Following further consultations in 1975, the Gulbenkian Foundation announced the award of £110,000 towards the conservation training unit to be set up by the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge at Whittlesford Mill House from its Hamilton Kerr bequest, further support for the unit being obtained from the Baring Foundation. The Gulbenkian Foundation also made a grant of £10,000 to the Courtauld Institute of Art, London University, for the expansion of its conservation training facilities.

The Treasury made the following grants in aid for 1976–77: to the British Museums, £5,030,000; British Museum (Natural History), £3,771,000; Science Museum, £2,729,000; Victoria and Albert Museum, £4,131,000; Imperial War Museum, £1,269,000; National Gallery, £2,202,000; National Maritime Museum, £1,701,000; National Portrait Gallery, £631,000; Tate Gallery, £2,010,000; Wallace Collection, £340,000; Sir John Soane's

Museum £69,785; Museum of London, £906,465; and to the six Area Museum Councils in England, £770,000. The grants to the Science Museum and the Victoria and Albert Museum include the sums allocated to the funds they administer respectively for purchases by local museums in the scientific and art fields of £50,000 and £400,000. In Scotland, the following grants in aid were made: to the National Galleries of Scotland, £781,000; to the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, £302,000; the Royal Scottish Museum, £788,980 including the two funds for purchases by local museums of £40,000 and £5,000 (scientific purchases) and for the Council for Museums and Galleries in Scotland, £60,000. In Wales, the National Museum of Wales received a grant in aid of £2,443.000 and the Council for Museums in Wales, £30,000. Although the Treasury provided supplementary votes towards the end of the previous financial year several national museums have also obtained special advances from the annual grant for purchases, determined on a triennial basis, thus reducing their remaining allocation. The rapid exhaustion of the fund for purchases by local museums administered by the Victoria and Albert Museum at an early stage in the financial year highlights the problems which museums face in acquiring objects in the art market. It is useful to record the increased use of the powers under the Finance Acts of 1972 and 1973 for the acceptance of works of art by the Treasury in lieu of death duties and with relief from estate duty (and since the 1975 Finance Act, of capital transfer tax).

In a statement in the House of Commons on 16 February, 1976, the Minister for the Arts announced that expenditure by local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales on local museums and galleries (including capital expenditure) had been:

1970–71 . . .	£6·8 million
1971–72 . . .	£9·0 million
1972–73 . . .	£10·2 million
1973–74 . . .	£13·7 million
1974–75 . . .	£20·9 million

Government circulars on rate support grant and local government expenditure (Department of the Environment circulars 88/75 and 129/75) indicated that there would be no scope for increased expenditure in real terms on libraries, museums and art galleries in 1976/77. For recreation, the circulars stress the need to increase charges and reduce the level of service. Owing to the concurrent nature of museum provision at county and district level, and its administration at the latter level within broad-based leisure departments in many cases, certain imbalances are likely to arise. The Association of Metropolitan Authorities has called on its members to find ways of maintaining their activities in the field of arts and recreation, which improve the quality of life.

The annual conference of the Museums Association was held in Durham from 14–19 July, 1975 and was addressed on the opening day by the Minister for the Arts. The theme of the conference was the Interaction of National and Provincial Museums and papers were given by the Directors of many of the national museums both in the plenary and specialist sessions. Mr. Michael Levey, Director of the National Gallery, announced the setting up of a bursary scheme to enable short term attachments to the Gallery of curatorial staff from non national museums and the first awards have been made for 1976. A similar scheme is likely to be inaugurated at the Victoria and Albert Museum.

The northern extension of the National Gallery was opened in June, 1975, the National Railway Museum, an outstation of the Science Museum, was opened in York in September and in November, the Royal Scottish Museum opened new displays on Evolution and on Minerals in its reconstructed north-east wing. A new extension was opened at the R.A.F. Museum and during 1976 it is hoped to complete the Tate Gallery extension and the new Museum of London in the Barbican. Many other developments have taken place throughout the country including the display of Tudor and Stuart portraits from the National Portrait Gallery at Montacute House in Somerset, a National Trust property.

LOCAL AUTHORITY MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES

The Municipal Year Book is pleased to publish, after a gap of four years, a list of museums and art galleries administered by the new local authorities, and acknowledges with thanks the response by local authorities to a general enquiry made early in 1976.

The Editor does not claim that at this stage the list below is either complete or comprehensive but he hopes it will engender interest leading to more facts in later editions. He is happy to record his appreciation of the co-operation of the Editor of the Museums Association who at the same time was preparing her first edition of the association's new Museums Yearbook.

Where known, the officer of the local authority with overall responsibility for the service is named.

CIVIC THEATRES

The list of Civic Theatres set out below has been compiled from replies to a general enquiry addressed to local authorities in January 1976. It purports to show the extent of the involvement of local government in the management of theatres and whether financial support is given annually thereto, by rate fund contributions and Arts Council grants. The hope is that this information will enable particular local authorities to appreciate the extent of theatre management at the expense of the annual rate levy, and the scope for any specific lines of enquiry they may wish to pursue in this field.

It is clear that not all civic theatres are helped by an annual grant from the Arts Council, either centrally from London or through their Regional Councils. Probably this list is not complete and the Editor would be happy to have information from other local authorities who actively support the theatrical side of the Arts. In a later edition and, once the overall statistics in this Year Book are complete, it may well be possible to have the comments of the Arts Council.

The Civic Theatres are listed in alphabetical order of the towns in which they are situated, and with the name of the theatre followed in brackets, by the name of the responsible local authority. The letters thereafter indicate:

(a) financial support from the General Rate Fund each year
(b) financial support from the Arts Council each year
(c) the theatre is open throughout the year
(d) the theatre is managed by a Trust, upon which the local authority is represented

The name and address of the manager or responsible officer, is added.

THE ARTS COUNCIL OF GREAT BRITAIN

105 Piccadilly, London, W1V 0AU (01-629 9495).

Chairman: The Lord Gibson.

Secretary-General: Roy Shaw.

The objects of The Arts Council of Great Britain as defined by the 1967 Royal Charter are to develop and improve the knowledge, understanding and practice of the arts; to increase the accessibility of the arts to the public throughout Great Britain; and to advise and co-operate with government departments, local authorities and other bodies on any matters concerned, whether directly or indirectly, with the foregoing objects.

THE SCOTTISH ARTS COUNCIL

19 Charlotte Sq., Edinburgh, EH2 4DF (031-226 6051).

THE WELSH ARTS COUNCIL

REGIONAL ARTS ASSOCIATIONS

The Arts Council of Great Britain as well as local authorities, local education authorities, industry, charitable trusts and private patrons, provides funds for Regional Arts Associations which promote the development and expansion of the arts in their region.

A network of Regional Arts Associations now covers England and Wales (except Buckinghamshire), but they owe their existence less to a pre-determined national strategy than the initiative of groups of local authorities and other bodies. Regional Arts Associations are independent and autonomous bodies; they are neither regional branches of the Arts Council as is sometimes imagined nor are they purely local authority associations, but they work in partnership with both. They are concerned with all the arts—community arts, dance, drama, film, literature, music, opera, visual arts—and they combine at a regional level the work of the various national agencies such as the Arts Council of Great Britain, British Film Institute and Crafts Advisory Committee.

Generally Regional Arts Associations work through others but they are also concerned with the direct provision of arts events in those areas where no existing organization is capable of promoting them. Regional planning and co-ordination is an integral function of the RAAs and they work closely with local authorities over a wide range of activities including capital projects through the Arts Council of Great Britain's Housing the Arts Fund and the regional touring of major professional companies. The other principal services provided by the Regional Arts Associations are grant-aiding (including financial support for theatres, orchestras, arts centres, festivals and community arts), publications and publicity, advice and research; consumer subsidy; and help forartists.

Local authorities have discovered that support for and co-operation with Regional Arts Associations enables them to realize the promotion and development of their arts services to maximum effect. In addition they provide an effective means whereby the Arts Council of Great Britain can progressively devolve responsibility for many activities thereby involving the regions in the allocation of national resources or funds in their areas.

LIBRARIES

Review by L. J. TAYLOR, BA, ALA

General remarks

Periods of nil growth, or of retrenchment are frequently designated as suitable for planning, for the constructive thinking that can be implemented when the development brakes are off again. The year 1975–76 was certainly a time of little progress and of little expectation of better times in the immediate future, so that this report must necessarily be shorter than usual. If forward planning was going on, it appeared to be little discussed, though a general concern with the future viability of the whole service and a questioning of the premises on which it is based—such as freedom of access to library materials for all—began to be noticed.

Restrictions on services

Throughout the year much attention was devoted in the national and, more particularly, the local press to the effects on library services of cuts in expenditure. For the first time since World War II we were faced with a situation of nationwide reductions that not only resulted in fewer new books being purchased, but also led to libraries closing for half-days, or imposing heavier fines, or introducing charges where service had been free, or of cutting down staff at both professional and support levels. Frequently a combination of cuts was required to achieve the target reductions in expenditure and drastic changes came over many library authorities' general demeanour. A survey in March 1975 (the situation has deteriorated since then) showed that of 107 respondents (Scotland was excluded) as many as 16 had reduced staff establishments, while 29 were not permitted to fill some vacancies. Charges to the public went up in 71 of the 107, and 15 were imposing new charges. New building progress was halted in 31 cases and modified in 21. Restriction of hours of service was a factor resisted at first (only 5 service points closed completely) and this early report showed that book funds were not lower in real terms, though their purchasing power was allowed to drop. As the year went on and the 1976–77 estimates were being considered, however, more serious intelligence was received on a piece-meal basis. Cheshire, for example, was expecting to have to cut staff by 10% in 1976–77, as was Glasgow. West Sussex was planning to close 22 volunteer centres, which would normally be replaced by branches, but these places would now be served, temporarily, by mobile stops. One of the few bright spots was South Glamorgan whose Librarian claimed that no fundamental cut had been imposed, even allowing work on the new central library in Cardiff to proceed.

Most publicity centred on Buckinghamshire, quite recently regarded as one of the most progressive and innovative of library authorities. During a disastrous year 1975–76 the book-fund was crippled by a cut of 77%,bringing it down from £291,670 to £65,270. Protests naturally followed this decision, especially as it was part of a move to save £308,320, roughly one third of the total budget. First the staff appealed to the Education minister, then the Library Association protested to the Arts minister, following this up by a deputation when no satisfactory response was given. The DES library advisers consulted with the Buckinghamshire council, and the Library Advisory Council took note of the situation. But no improvements were reported, and for the 1976–77 budget a figure of £133,000 was agreed for the book-fund—still no more than a third of its proper level if pre-1975 standards of provision were to be at least maintained. In addition other economy measures have now required all libraries in the county to close regularly from Saturday lunchtime to Tuesday morning.

This one authority has been highlighted not to pillory its council so much as to show that the Public Libraries and Museums Act of 1964 has become a dead letter so far as concerns the supervision of library authorities in their obligation to provide a satisfactory service. The standards of 1962, though modest, have rarely been achieved in full by any authorities, but worse, the machinery of the Arts and Libraries Branch of the DES complete with its own minister, with the Advisory Council and with four library advisers on the permanent staff is of no avail when abuses occur in a period of economy.

Other major issues

In this context it is no surprise that few topics have made any significant impact. At the very end of the year 1975–76 a Public Lending Right Bill was introduced into the House of Lords, after innumerable delays. Library interests are divided on this issue, with the Library Association taking a strong line against the proposal on, grounds of principle while individual librarians have frequently thought this position untenable in the face of the almost undoubted, though quantitatively undemonstrable influence of public library loans on the sale of books. The LA withdrew from the Technical Investigation Group, while the Library Advisory Council for England, largely made up of librarians, was also deeply concerned at the decision to go ahead with legislation at the present time, when it could be damaging to the library service. Since the funds for the scheme are proposed to be centrally provided, the hub of the argument lies between the authors' groups' contention that PLR must start somewhere and public library issue sampling gives the best basis at low administration cost; and the public librarians' resentment at bearing the full burden of the extra work, with no absolute guarantees that, for example, calculation of rate support grant would not be affected by the need to provide a central pool to operate and fund PLR.

Little has been reported about the effects on services in Wales of its differential legal basis, under which four district councils were given library powers, nor about the situation in Scotland. The first full year of Scottish re-organization is too recently completed for annual reports to be available at the time of writing. It is, however, worth remarking that a full-time Library Advisor for Scotland has been appointed for the first time.

General trends

When resources are scarce, co-operation is at a premium. The period of comparative affluence had tended to diminish the importance of local co-operation organizations of regional library bureaux, and of inter-authority arrangements such as co-operative acquisition of books or journals. The British Library Lending Division had become everybody's longstop, enabled to satisfy most demands because most libraries were able to provide good basic materials for everyday requirements. When inflation set in, however, stresses developed. A good example of action taken to reduce costs is the Yorkshire and Humberside Joint Library service. This body, given a difficult birth by the break-up of the West Riding County Library system, now operates from Wakefield an inter-lending system (based on the former Yorkshire Regional Library Bureau), a section of the national fiction reserve (formerly held at Sheffield), the old West Riding central pool stock, and, for the linking of inter-lending, a book transport system that also connects with the British Library Lending Division. This last, experimental, function has proved viable and has led to further studies for a national transport system.

Other co-operative ventures are the local joint committee set up after the Sheffield study by the DES in which the interplay between public and other libraries in an area was extensively observed; the SCOLCAP experiment in which Glasgow and Edinburgh public libraries are participating in a shared resources experiment for cataloguing data to be computer-produced co-operatively; and the development by the London and South East Regional Library System (LASER) of computer-producedcatalogues (in microfilm) by which direct interlending requests can be made between libraries holding the necessary outputs, and a development of this system towards on-line communication for the participating libraries.

Range of services

Perhaps because of the financial barriers to the improvement of their bookstocks, librarians have shown during the year a diversity of interests in adding to the range of services they can offer. A survey of libraries' publicity material conducted in late 1974 and reported in 1975; found that there were at least 13 special categories of individual readers catered for (including for example the blind, immigrants, Open University students and retarded readers), as well as 15 types of institutions (such as adult education classes, Borstals, playgroups, and welfare centres). The format of materials provided gave a list of 18 categories (cassettes, drawings, pottery, video recordings and wall charts among them), and many authorities highlighted such special book collections as historical children's books, motor manuals, patents and play sets. Though perhaps little of all this is absolutely new, yet the range is impressive and is emphasized by further evidence through the year of individual new departures. Cheshire introduced a children's 'dial-a-story', which resulted in as many as 5,000 calls in one week; Lewisham staged an Edgar Wallace centenary exhibition and film festival; Leicestershire and Hammersmith both employed travelling exhibits to enhance their attractions for children; Shropshire produced a 50th anniversary postal cover; and Rotherham created a video newsreel.

The emergence of the concept of the public library as a cultural centre was given more point by the DES pamphlet: Public libraries and cultural activities. In this, as well as stressing the range of services suitable to be offered, attention is drawn to the idea of cultural activities being a means of bringing into a reading orbit those at present repelled by the public library middle-class image. A Library Advisory Council working party was set up specifically to examine the needs of the disadvantaged, and this group, after dealing with the provision of library services in penal and hospital establishments, is turning its attention more closely to the needs of the economically and socially deprived. A similar piece of work is being carried on by two researchers at the Polytechnic of North London who are aiming to produce a handbook of guidance and a review of current practice in public library service to ethnic minorities.

Two ideas that have received further support, though again not new, are the integration of local authority museum, archive, library and gallery resources, and the development of internal information services to local government members and officials. A certain amount of warmth was engendered by the first concept when put forward by a librarian who took perhaps insufficient note of the specialized skills possessed by curators and archivists necessary for the full exploitation of resources, but the subsequent correspondence showed a readiness to co-operate among these disciplines which augured well. An example of the local government services, again from Cheshire, interestingly involved the non-library authorities—the district councils—in the financing of a comprehensive scheme based on the county library. In this scheme, public enquiry points for council information were also provided.

Literacy

The national campaign to combat adult illiteracy was, like the Open University, a project that could take for granted public library involvement and support, and like that project also took for granted that libraries required no additional support. The profession, however, took the idea very much to its heart, and we find many libraries with staff and resources devoted to supporting the scheme. To quote a single example, Lambeth made available over 100 simply written books, reading kits and games, avoiding as far as possible boring or embarrassing material such as would be found by using children's reading instruction. The Library Association had a triple involvement, issuing a policy statement on libraries and literacy, preparing a guide to suitable reading matter, New readers start here, and giving the Director of the National Adult Literacy Campaign, William Devereux, a public platform at the 1975 Public Libraries Conference. A related theme, the reading standards of children at school, was of course dealt with thoroughly by the Bullock report A language for life, and among the many references to the importance of school libraries, there was also a mention of the role of the public library in community life, a reminder, one reviewer thought, of opportunities lost by the service in the past.

Research

Mention has been made in passing of various pieces of specialized research, such as the Sheffield area study, but perhaps the most significant research item was one that did not appear: the LAMSAC study on staffing in Public Libraries, which still was unpublished about two years after its placing in the hands of the DES. In December 1975 the Department gave a general answer to the Library Association's enquiry attributing the delay in part to the need to consider very carefully any implications for future financing of the public library service. Studies that did appear included a user survey in Berkshire, and a report on the numbers of women in librarianship, which showed, among other data, the number of qualified married women at work in all libraries to have risen from 13% to 43% of the female work force over the last twenty years, though conversely there was a very high drop-out rate of women qualified librarians within five years of their entry on to the LA register.

A more encouraging development was the establishment at Leeds Polytechnic of a Public Libraries Management Research Unit. Although the Unit, which is so far locally funded, does not intend to be over-ambitious, it is foreseen that some fundamental research into reading habits, for instance, may be launched.

Statistics

For the years from 1964 to 1975 the British National Bibliography (now part of the British Library) has produced for the Library Association tables of average prices of new books, with the object of showing trends on an annual basis. The rapidity of inflation's rise in recent years has now led the steering committee of this exercise to increase its frequency to three times a year, plus an annual figure. In August 1975 the overall average price of new titles showed an annual rise of 53.3 points to 259.7. As if the 25% annual rise were not bad enough, the September to December 1975 average prices rose another 39.1% on to that point. In hard figures, the average new novel was then costing £2.40 and the average non-fiction title £5.14½.

Overall statistics have themselves become a casualty, it seems, of shortage of resources. For two or three years now, the annual returns have been inadequate in some major respect. The returns for 1974–75, the latest to be supplied from the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, report no figures at all for Scottish libraries, and are short of a few major English authorities in the overall financial figures. However, even fewer authorities gave figures even for bookstock. This let-down by the libraries is the more distressing as it counterbalances the far greater provision by CIPFA of overall totals. Book issues were given for the first time, but with only 85 authorities reporting, it is not surprising that the grand total of book use should be as low as 369,480,000. A more informative figure is the issue rate, at 10;86 per year per head of population. Since for its main responsibilities the DES accepts the task of producing statistics—in six substantial annual volumes—it appears highly desirable that the Department's weight should be felt more effectively in gathering basic figures, the lack of which is as hindering to development of the service in a penurious year as in an expansive one. If the DES still cannot collect these figures itself it should give more assistance to its willing agent than it appears to have done recently.

The Profession

Efforts to raise the maximum basic salary for librarians, mentioned in last year's report, have made no further progress, but the minimum level has been raised by three points on the AP3 scale. This improvement came after arbitration by a Board in the Conciliation Service. The job evaluation proposal is still, however, in hand. A ten-year comparison of progress made by salaries of four categories of librarians, showed that public librarians had improved their commencing salaries by 180% compared with a typical high level (top of P.O.2) post's increase of only 126%. These figures were vastly better than university library senior staff but below the increases registered by Civil Service and ILEA Education library staff. All four levels of public library service salaries calculated had improved less than national average earnings over the same ten years.

Sad losses to the profession occurred of whom the most illustrious name was that of Lionel McColvin, full of years and honours at 79. Of those still working, the deaths of David Colley of Manchester, and John Hoyle of Dudley will be sorely felt. Liverpool was unfortunate to lose in the same year two of its senior staff: Alan Hawgood and J. R. Cowan. The early deaths of Kenneth Chatfield (Kent County) and Gerald Cotton (once of Swinton and Pendlebury and later Salford) were particularly distressing.

The Library Association held its Public Libraries Conference at Eastbourne, where, apart from the paper on adult literacy, referred to earlier, an audience reduced in size equally by financial restrictions and by local government reorganization, heard papers by R. E. Grimshaw and P. J. Jordan (on new directions,; by H. H. Douglas (services for the sick and handicapped); by F. M. Gardner (standards for public libraries in Europe); by K. Graves (service and staffing levels); and by J. R. A. Walker (local government information services). In his Presidential address, E. V. Corbett (Wandsworth) chose to review that last ten years (since the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964) as a period of substantial but qualified achievement, which it behoved librarians to consolidate even during the difficult years ahead.

Buildings

The list of new buildings opened is a far less impressive one than in some years—hard evidence that the recession in capital spending has begun to bite. A new central library was opened at Blackburn (by the Prime Minister), costing £880,000, and gave such a spurt to the local service that further supplies of books had to be drawn from the county headquarters. Other major buildings included Sutton (Surrey), the first ever purpose-built headquarters in the borough in an open plan style, and noted for its writer-in-residence project. Work continues on the Mitchell Library extension for Glasgow, which when completed will have eclipsed in size even the vast complex in Birmingham and which at 1975 prices will have cost £7½m. Glasgow also spent £½m on a new branch at Hillhead. An unusual conversion was that of a bus garage at Harwich, while the facade of the 1859 Market House at Salisbury has been retained for the new central library.

NATIONAL LIBRARIES

Under the Copyright Act 1911, The British Museum, WC1, is entitled to receive free copies of published books:

The following Libraries:

The Bodleian Library, Oxford; The University Library, Cambridge; The National Library of Wales, Aberystwyth; The National Library of Scotland, Edinburgh 1; Trinity College, Dublin; can have copies of published books on written application to the publisher within 12 months of publication.

The British Library was created in July 1973 under Act of Parliament by merging a number of large national libraries, with the object of providing comprehensive reference, lending and bibliographic services on a national scale. The British Library, Reference Division comprises the former British Museum Library, whose 8 million books, however, are still housed in the Museum, and the Science Reference Library which is elsewhere in London. The British Library, Lending Division, which operates a rapid postal library inter-lending service of journals and photocopies is and will remain in Yorkshire.

All right then; design something better than this.

At Exbury, we specialise in extra-heavy trees.

An extra-heavy tree is one between 4 and 5·5 metres high; and has a stem circumference of between 16 and 24 cms. Which means that the instant it's transplanted it's beautiful.

Because of their height, Exbury trees are in scale with new sites and existing buildings.

Because of their girth, they present oo much of a challenge to vandals.

At Exbury, we have many different species and varieties of rees, many of which are hardy enough to flourish in highly polluted atmospheres.

Exbury trees can soften a hard ine; dramatise a flat site; bring ife to a new estate.

They add beauty. And they are for people.

No offence, but when it comes to purity of design we don't think you can do as well as nature.

One final point: because we grow more extra-heavy trees than anyone in the country, we can supply in very large quantities (or very small) and at exceedingly competitive prices. Why not send us the coupon, and have our catalogue for your library?

PARKS AND OPEN SPACES

Review by THE INSTITUTE OF PARK AND RECREATION ADMINISTRATION

The subject heading of this sub-section within the Cultural and Leisure Activities Section of the Municipal Year Book is Parks and Open Spaces, a title that has no doubt been used for many years. However, as referred to in the 1976 review, 'parks are nowadays conceived as outdoor recreational workshops' and therefore over the years there has been an increasing involvement by the profession in providing facilities on a much wider scale, covering parks; recreation wet and dry—indoors and out; amenity and open spaces; all of which may be included under this umbrella term of leisure provision. In fact many former parks departments are now styled 'Recreation and Amenity' or 'Leisure Services'.

The advent of local government reorganization with the assistance of 'Bains', resulted in considerable emphasis being placed on recreation services and which greatly encouraged the new local authorities to develop and improve their leisure facilities. Unfortunately the economic situation has made its presence felt, with the result that in many cases there has been 'no growth' in respect of a service which is very much a 'growth' area. It is a service which particularly contributes to the quality of life.

The philosophy applied to parks, recreation, amenity and leisure provision has undergone a radical change, a change which has been also reflected in the outlook of the Institute of Park and Recreation Administration. Although horticulture was heretofore a basic discipline, and in fact to an extent still is, the service has become multi-discipline and offers multi-purpose facilities.

Along with the term recreation, the work environment plays a prominent part and in many ways the one is complementary to the other, in the facilities promoted. The conservation of natural resources is an important aspect and the Institute of Park and Recreation Administration works closely with the land-based professions and others in endeavouring to preserve our environmental heritage, yet improve the recreational aspect.

Although very few new parks are being constructed, there is a continuing process of updating, with new design concepts incorporated, not least of which is the development of landscaped complexes linking residential and commercial zones with existing urban parks, leading wherever possible into the countryside. Much thought—and action—is also involved in undertaking feasibility studies to ensure that the maximum use is made of existing parks and recreation facilities; a sound policy, having financial restraint in mind.

It would be an omission not to make reference to the increasing part being played in leisure provision by the Countryside and Forestry Commission, as it is felt that the country's recreation needs should not be only thought of at urban level, but as a total national concept.

The Institute was established in 1926 and the following are included in its Memorandum and Articles of Association:

(a) To encourage the study of technical and management questions.
(b) To promote the art of design in the laying out of parks, recreation facilities, open spaces and public amenities in relation thereto.

With regard to these specific aims, the Institute for over fifty years has served the public through the medium of local government and by its educational endeavours, its membership, examination system and residential staff college of park and recreation administration has ensured a high standard of fully trained and professionally qualified officers for the service.

Through the policy of its council the Institute has anticipated modern thinking on amenity and leisure provision. The Diploma of Park and Recreation Administration is the highest qualification obtainable in this sphere and culminates a period of study in administration, management and modern techniques appropriate to amenity provisions, recreation and entertainment facilities.

The Staff College, established nearly thirty years ago, superimposes upon basic skill requirements technical, management and administrative training within a liberal framework necessary in this sphere of public service. Started at Lyme Hall, Disley, Cheshire and then re-established some five years later at the headquarters of the Institute, Lower Basildon, Reading, Berkshire, it is interesting to note that nearly 30% of the Institute's professional membership has been trained at the Staff College of Park and Recreation Administration, which is about to enter a new stage of development. From September 1976, the course will become fully integrated with Reading College of Technology, which will add a new dimension to the education facilities provided.

The annual conferences of the Institute play an important part in the presentation of papers covering both technical and policy matters and allow the fullest participation of the local authority representative whilst making available a regular forum for professional members. Conferences in one form or another have been held over the past 50 years at venues industrial, cultural and resort, and have attracted very large attendances in the past, particularly on the four occasions when they have been linked with a world congress in park and recreation administration. The majority of local authorities participate, but with the advent of local government reorganization and the reduction in number of local authorities who register attendance of delegates, it is anticipated that attendances will be dramatically reduced from 1,000 plus to about 400.

The visits and tours of inspection which take place during Institute annual conferences form a very important part of the programme, an aspect to which the subject particularly lends itself. Delegates have the opportunity of not only listening to papers, but actually seeing the latest developments and methods of maintenance of a modern parks, recreation, amenity and leisure service in the widest possible sense. 1977 will give the opportunity to participate in a more streamlined conference which will be held at Scarborough.

The Institute's professional journal is widely read by local authority elected representatives as well as providing a technical publication for its members and other related professions.

The Institute functions through ten regional branches and has, in addition, an overseas membership. It gains also from a close link with the International Federation of Park and Recreation Administration, a world wide organization, and it has many links with governmental and non-governmental bodies.

THE BRITISH RESORTS' ASSOCIATION

The Association was originally known as the Association of Health and Pleasure Resorts and since 1921 has flourished as an active organization in the field of tourism, holidays and leisure activities. The Membership comprises 76 seaside and spa local authorities and 6 regional tourist boards. It has reshaped its image and procedures to meet the changing conditions within its field of activities and the reforms brought about by Local Government Reorganization.

Very briefly the aims and objects of the Association are to keep a watching brief on matters affecting the mutual interests of its membership, to take such action as may be necessary or advisable to protect and promote those interests and to act as a clearing house for information of value to members.

The Association is in constant touch with Government departments on proposed legislation or policies which might affect its membership. The Association maintains a close link with the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board.

A close relationship exists between the Association, the Institute of Municipal Entertainment and the British Association of Tourist Officers.

Foreword by The Rt. Hon. FRED MULLEY MP
Secretary of State for Education and Science

In the last three years public expenditure has grown by nearly 20 per cent, while output has risen by less than 2 per cent. Over the same period the ratio of public expenditure to gross domestic product has risen from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. Fifteen years ago it was 42 per cent. Twenty pence in every pound we spend is borrowed in some way or another. These are stark figures and they add up to something quite simple: in a situation of this kind, no programme of public spending can expect to escape restraints on its growth. Education can be no exception. Our national and local priorities are, or should be, identical—dealing with inflation and reducing public spending; so that investment can grow and unemployment decline.

Although restraints on public expenditure will undoubtedly be severe, the education service has been fortunate in two ways. The first of these is that the planned reduction in its growth will not take place immediately. Expenditure on education in Great Britain will increase to £5,816 million in 1976–77. After that, it will decline to £5,584 million by 1979–80. The second, and by far the more important factor, is the drop in the total numbers of school pupils which has been brought about by the decline in the birth rate. We cannot be certain whether or not the birth rate will continue to decline, and by how much, but we do know that there will be 600,000 fewer children in schools in five years time—almost 7 per cent fewer than now. That is a startling figure and it has enormous implications for the whole of the education system, from the primary school right through to higher education.

Inevitably, however, if only because expenditure on education can never be as high as we would like it to be, there have to be priorities. It seems to me to be only right that the Government should place its greatest emphasis on the education of children of statutory school age, and also on those aged 16–19, particularly those who are or will be going into full-time employment for the first time.

The bulk of the expenditure will, as it always has done, remain under the control of the local authorities. The local authorities in fact recoup about two-thirds of their spending from central government through the rate support grant. An elaborate system has been devised to see that the grant reflects educational and other needs. (This system of support is perhaps too little understood and more needs to be done by those most closely involved to make its working clearer to the rest of the education service and the wider public.)

It is very important that all concerned should see that the money provided for education in their area, either through the rates or through the rate support grant, does in fact go to education.

Fred Mulley

Review by SIR LINCOLN RALPHS, MSc, PhD, LLB, Doc Univ, HonDSc, FCP

formerly Chief Education Officer for Norfolk

For many in the Education Service the period under review has seemed to be one of fearful foreboding and frustration. The tempo of development has slowed down and the promised land appeared to be further off and the wandering in the wilderness increasingly confusing. The broad pattern of Local Government reorganization having been carried through, the new patterns emerged and had been increasingly accepted without much evidence of the promised advantages and economies. The adoption of the recommendations of the Bains Report produced a new but, on the whole, less pleasant face on the local government administration of education and there have been increasing expressions of the view that education would soon be taken out of local government. Such fears are not new. It is perhaps encouraging to those who have firm faith in the value of locally administered education that they are fears that have not been realised. None the less many councillors came to feel that the central control of their function was increasingly oppressive while individual initiative tended to be stifled and restricted by financial and other regulations. There has been a continuing protest that policies for change and development were advocated at the centre while provision for their implementation was not made by central government. So in a time of inflation the service appeared to be running desperately to stay where it was and all too often was gloomingly abandoning standards it could no longer maintain. The burden of rates was becoming intolerable and the education service, still by far the largest local government service, for this reason attracted considerable criticism as did the Government's somewhat arbitrary distribution of rate support grant which appeared to be hard on some rural areas.

As ever the public looked for great achievements from schools, for standards that were increasingly high, higher even than those which society accepted for itself. In the event this progress was not apparent. In part this was due to the unfortunate publicity which is always given in the media to defects and deficiencies. The increase in juvenile crime, the rise in the number of illegitimate births, the increase in venereal disease, the growth of violence and the spread of vandalism received much publicity. Against this constant publicity there could easily have developed an atmosphere of despair had it not been for the fact that the education service is by its very nature essentially optimistic. Alongside the irresponsibility of the young is their irrepressible enthusiasm, but even this seemed at times in peril as the number of unemployed school leavers tended to grow, obliging authorities to take on the role of employer and to investigate and initiate schemes for the employment of the young. Government Departments, other than the Department of Education and Science, took an interest in these matters and some, like the Government's Training Services Agency, appeared to have access to greater resources, thus encouraging an envious and rather unhappy relationship which might have been avoided. Perhaps it was inevitable at a time when it was given to so few to do so little. And in measuring the potential of what could be done there was in the period under review too great a tendency to limit this to the money resources made available. Repeatedly teacher organizations protested the need for more money and were inclined to despair if such financial increase was not made available. There was less declared enthusiasm for making the best use of available resources of improvisation. Inside the schools, however, if not in the columns of the daily press, teachers showed great initiative and ingenuity, especially in the infant schools where a traditional lack of materials has inspired self help, imagination and originality.

There were those who thought that over the years expenditure on education had been expanding so rapidly that the service should be called to account and that the allegedly starved social services should receive a larger portion of the cake. The vast expansion of the number of students of sociology created a pressure group and the wide publicity given to baby bashing and family disruption encouraged a public sympathy for this view. None the less a climate of adversity is not wholly bad for education. The tallest trees grow in the deepest malleys and our evolutionary history is rich in the positive response we have made to difficulties. So it was that when Mr. Callaghan succeeded Mr. Wilson as Prime Minister he called essentially for more than an interest in economic revival and interestingly enough the retiring Prime Minister claimed The Open University as his most satisfying achievement. The Open University was certainly able to point to a great record of achievement and its impact through radio and television was not unhelpful to its image. Its interests also widened as some saw its potentials for providing for younger persons a service of further education wider and cheaper than the traditional provision. Government support for the Open University's ambitions left some of the more traditional providers a little disgruntled and suspicious that resources might be unfairly distributed. The Government, however, had properly to recognise that some change was necessary and a Labour Government could hardly expect to be too much trammelled by traditions.

Examinations

While there was an increasing demand for an examination of the whole service and objectives of education, which generally meant school activities rather than education in its broadest and most vital sense, the schools themselves were much concerned with their own examinations. This was a major responsibility of the Schools Council which continued to come under vigorous if not always well-informed criticism. The Council's full title is Schools Council for Curriculum and Examinations. It has seen its tasks in this order and for over ten years has been concerned with curriculum development. For the past seven or eight years, however, it has given a great deal of attention to examinations. In the autumn of 1975 its Joint Examination Sub-Committee produced a report on the prospects for a single examination system at the age of sixteen. This meant a combination of the C.S.E. and G.C.E. examinations. The suggestions were put out for general discussion with a hope that the Council at its July Council in 1976 might agree proposals to be submitted for the consideration and action of the Secretary of State for Education and Science. Responsibility for the approval of these examinations rests with the Secretary of State. Although feasibility studies had been carried out on the combined examination there was strong opposition to the proposals. For the most part the opposition came from the G.C.E. examination authorities partly on the grounds that a single examination could not adequately cover the broad range of ability, but perhaps more understandably from proposals for the administrative arrangements which threatened to disrupt existing boards. Teacher opposition came from the associations traditionally concerned with secondary education, but the National Union of Teachers was strongly in favour. All-out opposition tended to be modified to demands for deferment and further research. The issue became something of a hot potato to hand to the Secretary of State and to the renewal of the often voiced criticism that the Schools Council was dominated by the N.U.T. In the event a submission was made to the Secretary of State in July, 1976.

The discussion on the single examination was also enlarged by proposals for a Certificate of Extended Examination for pupils who had little prospect of continuing in the sixth form for A level courses. Here the relationship with Further Education led to a criticism of the multiplication of examinations and the need for closer co-operation between schools and colleges of further education. No less was there concern at the increased cost of examinations and not only in financial terms but in terms of the time of teachers involved in the C.S.E. pattern in examination work. There were also those who asked if the examinations in fact measured what employers were really looking for in entrants to the varying jobs. More and more it was argued that attitudes and values were as important if not more important than erudition which had tended to dominate educational practice.

Teachers

The employment, recruitment and training of teachers, both in-service and initial training, were matters of continuous debate in the period under review. The Houghton award, followed by subsequent Burnham awards although subject to the Government's overall policy on incomes, left the teachers reasonably, some would say generously, rewarded. Many in local government felt that the Burnham Committee which had been reconstituted after local government reorganization, had, for one reason or another, been more willing to give in to teachers' demands. So the salaries of teachers became an increasingly large element in what was already the major service in local government. Equality of salaries between the sexes had long been established for the teaching profession. The outstanding debate for the local education authorities was not, therefore, sex discrimination on salaries but sex discrimination in various appointments which carried special responsibility payments and in the appointments of head teachers. The increasing trend towards co-education in secondary education posed some questions and it seemed that local education authorities tended to focus on equal distribution. The predominance of women teachers in primary and especially in infant schools continued although there were signs that schools were ready to see headmasters even in infant schools and posts had in any case to be advertised as being open to men as well as women. It was, however, in the middle schools, co-educational in the great majority of cases, that the issue of sex appeared to be almost irrelevant and appointing bodies were seen to be engaged solely in the search for the best persons for the job. The salaries of teachers was, therefore, not a question of sex but of size.

Economies in expenditure were sought, therefore, in the number of teachers to be employed and not unnaturally there was strong pressure to restrict expenditure to teachers engaged in teaching children of statutory school age. Developments in pre school-age activities were for the most part halted. The number of children of school age was declining and while forecasters were not always at one in their predictions there was general consent that the population (despite immigrants) would fall in the next five years and probably in the next ten years and maybe beyond that. On the basis of traditional class sizes this meant a decline in the number of teachers who should be employed in school which the increased salaries of teachers also tended to encourage. The Department of Education and Science had for some time been wrestling with this problem and emphasising, despite resistance, that the number of teachers in training must be reduced. Teacher organizations tended to take a contrary view and urged the necessity for smaller classes, pressing the educational advantages which would flow from the better pupil teacher ratio. The authorities and the Government had, however, to keep the economic realities much to the fore despite the growing concern that unemployment among trained teachers might be a social danger. It was after all well known that many newly trained nurses could not find hospital posts and that new hospital buildings in some areas remained unused because resources for staffing were not available. Local authorities did not therefore see the position of teachers as unique. Suggestions were made for earlier retirement linked with appropriate pension safeguards as offering a more satisfactory solution than having professionally trained persons without jobs. The authorities, concerned now to find jobs for school leavers, were no less harassed by professionally trained staff chasing too few jobs.

Inevitably the number of places for teacher training had to be reduced and this was associated with the abolition of the Area Training Organisations and the belief that teachers should not be trained in the isolation of colleges of education but brought into the wider professional training offered in colleges of further education, polytechnics and universities. The smaller colleges of education could not hope to survive and many were closed. Others sought to continue by laying emphasis on the importance of in-service training. The need for such training was fully recognised by educationists, but its economic realisation seemed far from achievement. There were also those who felt that in-service needs should not be met in colleges of education. Even more than initial training it was widely felt that this should be in a wider context seen to be more relevant to the needs of the pupils. Significantly perhaps the Association of Teachers in Technical Institutions and the Association of Teachers in Colleges and Departments of Education combined to form the new National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education with the disappearance of the Pelham Committee which had dealt with salaries of college of education staffs being incorporated in the new Further Education Committee of Burnham. Although the A.T.C.D.E. brought only 8,000 members to the combined force of 62,000 of the N.A.T.F.H.E., steps were taken to ensure that the minority should be represented in the fourteen regions and the national executive committee.

This reorganization was part of the fear and forebodings to which reference was made at the beginning of this review. None the less the real facts had to be faced. The distinguished and most effective educationist, Lord Alexander, had warned many years earlier that the rise in expenditure on education and the number of teachers would not be met from the public funds, especially as great demands were being made from other sectors where the needs were gaining increasing public support, notably the social services. Those responsible for local government felt the continued need for economy. The optimists hoped for a better economic climate with the development of north sea oil and the anticipated world wide upturn in economic affairs. Others—the pessimists—felt that north sea oil would be so expensive as to offer minimal relief and the alleged upturn in world wide commerce was likely to be illusory. In the meantime the Chancellor of the Exchequer tried in novel ways to get the unions to believe that Oliver Twist should not be canonised.

Higher Education

All forms of higher education came under some restraint during the period now under review. The universities had become increasingly dissatisfied with the system of quinquennial grants. Originally conceived to provide some form of forward planning in periods of high inflation, the system was seen as restrictive although additional grants were made on an annual basis. Some felt that there had been too great an expansion of universities and as the cost for providing places for undergraduates was almost £2,000 per place per annum the public felt that they should see value for money. The extent of the subsidy to overseas students who rarely paid more than the normal fee of between £300–£400 per annum led to the criticism that as in the Health Services we provided free treatment for overseas visitors to an extent rarely reciprocated. So in education the new economic situation justified a review. The matter came to particular public notice in the midlands where one college had admitted over 80 per cent of foreign students, which was, of course, ten times greater than the national average. In 1966/67 the universities recurrent grant was £581m and this was issued as a cash limit to which the universities were required to conform. The cash limits included allowances for increases in prices and incomes so that universities could no longer rely on additional grants to meet agreed salary increases. There had been a small reduction in the number of students at the universities in 1972/3 but an increase of 10,000 was anticipated for 1976/7. There was some concern that in science numbers were falling while the demand for places in sociology increased enormously. Increased numbers of students involved the local education authorities in increases in student grants and the L.E.A.s resisted a precept about which they were not consulted. A university student population of 273,000 was felt by many to be large enough.

Development in polytechnics and colleges of further education was looked on with greater favour since it was assumed that those attending these institutions were committed to a productive career and for the most part had a careers objective when admitted to the college. The relation of the polytechnics to the universities and their position inside the local education authority system caused some unease. The Committee of Polytechnic Directors made blunt and insistent demands for the support they felt they should receive. Their evidence to the Commons Expenditure Committee deplored the absence of a long-term philosophical framework within which pragmatic short-term decisions could be made. "Higher education" they maintained "is an important part of the life of a large section of the population and its nature and the direction in which it develops must be the concern of society's elected representatives." The local education authorities were not unsympathetic to this point of view but they saw the expenditure of these major colleges as making unbearable demands upon these limited resources. They waited expectantly for a review of the basis of local government finance, but there was really little ground to imagine that central government's appetite for control could be preceded by substantial increase of finance.

Discipline

It is a tradition for successive generations to deplore the decline in discipline from the standards set in previous generations. Even when decline is admitted, and the evidence in the late nineteen-seventies was clear, there was great debate as to the source of and responsibility for the children. The National Union of Teachers, which argued that the standards in schools were rising and that delinquency and truancy had been exaggerated, were disposed to blame parents and the society at large for the fall in standards where they occurred. Other teacher organizations took somewhat differing views. The extent of truancy was not easy to measure but its association with delinquency led magistrates to observe that truancy was on the increase and that the organization of personal options in schools of increasing size seemed to allow this to happen with insufficient knowledge of whether the pupils were in school or not. While there was little support for the view that there should be a return to strict and corporal punishment there was an increasing suspicion that the education service in its passion for self-discipline had been overrun by psychiatrists and psychologists whose theories were too infrequently proved acceptable in practice. An objective review might record that discipline was not so good as it ought to be nor so bad as it was often represented to be.

On the issue of the treatment of offenders opinion hardened against the traditional methods which had proved to be ineffective. So far as juveniles were concerned attention was called to the potentials of "Intermediate Treatment" in which offenders were involved in youth activities of a normal kind. This really called for the effective co-operation of the education service and in particular that part of the traditional education service which was now under the Leisure Services Committee. Many found the separation of these committees as an ineffective and doctrinaire development after the Bains Report. Others, however, saw it as a special opportunity for the development of services which had tended to be axed when they were part of the playtime provision of education. In the event success or failure rested more on the persons employed than the structures adopted. A closer co-operation of teachers, social workers and magistrates was obviously desirable and was gradually developed. The role of the education welfare officer was increasingly recognised as important and in a period of mergers the two sections of that service made overtures for combined operations.

Personalities

There is a continuing debate on the power and influence of officers as compared with elected members both in local and national government. Few will doubt that the new management patterns in local government have apparently reduced the influence of Chief Education Officers, but in national government the increasing complexities of the education service, combined with the relative permanence of officials, leads to the view that the permanent officials exercise great influence if not power. So when it is decided that a Permanent Secretary should retire or change office the matter is of some importance. During the period under review Sir William Pile was transferred from the Department of Education and Science to become Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue. He was succeeded by Mr. James Arnot Hamilton. Whereas Sir William had long and varied experience in the education service Mr. Hamilton had none. He came to education as a civil servant involved in technology and indeed concerned with Concorde. It seemed inevitable that if he would no longer be concerned with rapid movement he would not escape from the embarrassment of noise.

The period was also notable for a steady number of retirements of Chief Education Officers and the unhappy deaths of elected members who had held office for many years. The tradition by which members held office for long periods was also changing. The restlessness of the age saw a limited period of service as more appropriate than a lifetime's commitment. So the faces of education changed more rapidly, for the elderly with some regret and for the young with greater prospect of opportunity.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION: TEACHING CENTRES

POST GRADUATE AGRICULTURAL STUDENTSHIPS

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland offer Post Graduate Awards for studies in the various branches of husbandry, horticulture, farm management, agricultural economics, agricultural statistics (experimental or economic), marketing (agricultural and horticultural), engineering (agricultural and dairy engineering, farm mechanization and farm buildings), rural estate management, the more applied aspects of agricultural science, and agricultural extension. Their present value for the academic year "1976–77 is £1180" per annum for students attending institutions within the City of London and in the Metropolitan Police district and £1085 per annum for those attending establishments elsewhere, plus allowances in certain cases. Lower rates apply to students living at home. In the assessment of grants for married students, account will be taken of the spouse's income on the basis of a scale of residual income.

Candidates must be British subjects normally resident in England and Wales for MAFF Awards, which are in the form of quota places at university departments and colleges. Full details are obtainable from university registrars or, alternatively, from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Room 116, Great Westminster House, London, SW1P 2AE. Nominations of students by universities etc., must be received by the Ministry not later than 1 August for Awards commencing in October.

Candidates normally resident in Scotland or Northern Ireland should apply to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, Room 63, St. Andrew's House, Edinburgh, EH1 3DA or the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, Dundonald House, Upper Newtownards Road, Belfast, BT4 3SB respectively. These Awards are made by competition in spring or early summer of each year to commence on 1 October. The closing date for receipt of completed application forms is 28 February for Scotland and 31 March for Northern Ireland.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION

Central responsibility for all Education in agricultural and horticultural subjects now rests in England and Wales with the Department of Education and Science and Welsh Education Office respectively. Courses of a practical kind are provided by County Councils at 47 County Agricultural Colleges and Institutes. (See County Agricultural Colleges and Institutes). The majority of Counties and some Boroughs also provide part-time instruction in agriculture and horticulture at Agricultural Colleges and other centres. Two-year Diploma courses have been superseded by a new pattern of 3-year sandwich courses leading to the Higher National Diploma (HND) or the Ordinary National Diploma (OND) in agricultural subjects. These new courses which started in 1969 are being provided at both non-maintained and County Colleges of Agriculture.

Thirteen Universities and University Colleges in England, Scotland and Wales offer degree courses in agricultural subjects. These are grant aided through the University Grants Committee on the same basis as other courses. There is also a course at Queen's University, Belfast.

In Scotland central responsibility for courses at Diploma and Degree level is vested in the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, while responsibility for the more practical teaching carried on in the Counties is borne by the Scottish Education Department.

Information on all full-time and sandwich courses run at Universities, County Agricultural Colleges and Institutes and other colleges in England and Wales is obtainable from the booklet "Agricultural Education" available free of charge from the Department of Education and Science, Elizabeth House, 39 York Road, London, SE1 7PH.

CLEAPSE (Consortium of Local Education Authorities for the Provision of Scientific Equipment) Development Group.

Formed in 1963 the consortium now has a large membership and is open to all Education Authorities in England south of the line Cheshire, Greater Manchester, South Yorkshire and Humberside.

The aims of the Consortium are as follows:

(a) To develop equipment for demonstration and teaching purposes and to construct prototypes.

(b) To consider requirements for science equipment for courses up to "A" level or its equivalent in educational establishments with a view to reducing to a more economical number the types in use.

(c) Through standardization and co-ordination of supply, to make available to members the advantages of bulk contract arrangements.

DIPLOMAS AND COURSES IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

PROVIDED BY BRITISH UNIVERSITIES AND POLYTECHNICS

UNIVERSITIES

Birmingham—Institute of Local Government Studies

Advanced Courses for Senior Local Government Officers—Ten week courses in management for senior local government officers have been provided by the Institute since 1967. Two courses are held in the Summer and Autumn terms each year.

The course is designed to enable senior local authority officers who currently exercise or who are about to exercise significant policy advisory responsibilities and/or major management responsibilities to examine the process of local authority policy making and implementation in depth.

The disciplines underlying effective policy making and implementation will be examined in the context of their relevance to the major problems currently confronting local authorities. These disciplines will include Economic Analysis Policy Studies, Organizational and Human Sciences, Political Studies, Accounting and Finance and Quantitative Analysis.

The range of teaching approaches used on the course is very wide. A major learning method is the use of small groups made up of members from all types of authority and from a wide range of local authority departments. These groups undertake a range of exercises and projects which collectively are intended to give all members the type of experience required to lay the foundation for effective contributions to policy making and top level management within the authority.

Special Activities. The Institute will be continuing the important research and development work for the Local Government Training Board, as well as work for central government departments and individual local authorities.

Special Seminars for Management Teams. The Institute will provide residential seminars at Wast Hills House or within their own areas for the management teams of local authorities to explore with the members of the Institute staff the main problems which the authority is faced with and the strategies open to the authority for handling them.

Seminars for Councillors. In the past the Institute has run a number of seminars for councillors. The Institute can provide seminars specially designed for elected representatives dealing with general management problems in local government or problem areas. One particularly effective form of seminar is that for a whole committee, e.g. a Policy and Resources Committee.

Problem Centred Seminars. The Institure will arrange seminars in which staff within the new local authorities can explore and discuss specific problems with members of the Institute staff. These can be held either within the authority or at Wast Hills House.

Advisory Work on Specific Problems. The Institute is available to provide advice and assistance on specific problems arising in connection with the management of new authorities.

Management Courses for a Particular Authority. The Institute can provide short management courses covering periods of one, two or three weeks specifically designed for the staff of an authority.

Inter-Authority Seminars. Much of the success of the new local government depends on relationships between counties and districts. The Institute can organize short seminars on an inter-authority basis to help, through training, in building up relationships between the new authorities.

Seminars for Local Government Chief and Deputy Chief Officers. Seminars are arranged in each academic year with the specific aim of bringing together chief officers and deputies from a range of departments, professions and types of authority to study major problems concerning local government. Each seminar will have a specific theme and will consist of a series of inter-related lectures backed up by a concentrated process of discussion. The major theme for this year will be the implications for local authorities of a period of financial restraint allied to a significant change in the basic assumptions underlying the provision of many local government services.

WORKING GROUPS

The Institute convenes each year a number of ad hoc or continuing working groups of local government officers concerned with research and intelligence, educational statistics, engineering control systems, corporate planning, personnel and industrial relations, financial management, economic appraisal and performance review and is willing to convene other such groups if so requested.

The Institute will be glad to discuss with any authority ways in which assistance may be offered during the coming year. Enquries should be addressed to Professor J. D. Stewart, Associate Director.

Degree of M.Soc.Sc. A number of courses are offered, which enable candidates to specialize either in Public Policy-making and Management in Local Government, and the Health Services or Administration of Development. One course out of the required three may be chosen from those offered by other departments within the Faculty of Commerce and Social Science.

Courses within the Institute:

The Study of Public Policy-making in Local Government and the National Health Service Organization Theory in Local Government and the National Health Service Local Government Finance Decision Simulation
Urban Government.
Personnel Management in Local Government and the National Health Service
Administrative Strategies for Development
The Dynamics of Change in Developing Countries
The Process of Administration in Developing Countries
Comparative Urban Administration
Rural Organization for Development
Public Enterprise in Developing Countries

Diploma in Development Administration. This is designed specifically for administrators and graduates from developing countries.

Courses in Local Administration for Senior Administrators from Overseas. Two of these courses are held in the academic year, each lasting four months. Their subject matter is varied in rotation—Management of Urban Development, Planning and Management of Rural Development, New Town Management and Management of Water and Waste Water Resources.

Further particulars, and application forms for any of the courses mentioned above can be obtained from the Secretary, Institute of Local Government Studies, University of Birmingham, Birmingham, B15 2TT.

Kent—Offers the following courses in Public Administration, etc:

1. The BA in Social Science enables an undergraduate to specialize in Part (II) in subjects which include Accountancy, Law, Politics and Government, Public Administration and Management and Social Policy and Administration. The Politics and Government course includes optional papers in British Central Administration and in Local Government.
2. An MPhil or PhD can be taken by thesis in any of the subjects mentioned in paragraph 1 above.
3. A one-year course leading to the degree of MA or Diploma in Local Government is offered, the syllabus of which aims to comply with the Training Recommendation of the Local Government Training Board on Management Development. It comprises local government at home and abroad, quantitative aspects of management, behavioural problems of organization and administration and the environment of local government. The course includes a short period of attachment to a department of a local authority, and candidates for the MA write a dissertation on some particular aspect of local government.
4. A one-year course leading to the degree of MA in Management Science is offered. The syllabus contains a heavy quantitative element and applications in the public sector are emphasized.

Liverpool—(Department of Political Theory and Institutions, The University, Social Studies Bldg., PO Box 147, Liverpool, L69 3BX) This University offers a five year course of education and training for officers of public authorities. The first two years of study (held on two afternoons and one evening weekly) lead to the Certificate in Public Administration. Intending students need not have passed the examination for matriculation into the university, but would normally be expected to have two or more passes at Advanced level GCE, or an ONC, or an equivalent qualification. The final three years of study lead to the Diploma in Public Administration. Students would normally be expected to have completed the certificate course, or an equivalent qualification.

Sheffield Polytechnic—Department of Political Studies—Head of Department: R. H. Haigh MA BSc(Econ), Teaching Cert.

BA in Public Administration. The degree of BA in Public Administration was first approved in 1968 by the Council for National Academic Awards and is an Honours degree awarded following the successful completion of a four-year Sandwich Course.

The degree is seen as a response to the demand for modern subjects and vocational relevance in academic study to meet the need for an increasing number of graduates in public service

The aim is to give to a graduate who is preparing for an administrative career a knowledge of political economic and social subjects so that their relevance to contemporary problems is observed.

Distinctive features of the course are the interrelation of subjects at each stage. Comparative studies are included to acquaint the student with systems and values of other countries.

A Sandwich course is one in which training is an essential part of the course and this is arranged so that the equivalent of one year is spent on placement with a public authority.

Students may be Polytechnic-based or authority-based and all may apply to their Local Education Authority for a grant to cover the periods of full-time study and fees. The Polytechnic arranges the training in conjunction with participating authorities and where an authority sponsors a student it is usually expected he will do his training with that authority.

MA in Public Administration. This is a taught course of seven terms part-time with a dissertation. Students specialize in the second year in either European Public Administration or Comparative Social Administration.

Diploma in Public Administration. The Department hopes to offer both a one-year full-time course and a two-year part-time course at postgraduate level from September 1976.

MPhil. The Department invites application from part-time students wishing to undertake research in public administration for the award of MPhil by dissertation.

Admission. Application for admission should be made on the form obtainable from the Secretary Sheffield Polytechnic, Pond St., Sheffield, S1 1WB (0742 20911).

Teesside Polytechnic—BA (Honours) degree in Public Administration. The general aim of the course is to provide the future graduate with a knowledge and understanding of the development, present state and future possibilities of the theory and practice of public administration. It is intended that students should appreciate the nature of public administration both as an academic discipline and as a vocational study. This degree will provide a basis for postgraduate and/or professional studies in a specialist field. As a first degree it is intended that something beyond a pattern of theoretically determined principles will be built An operational knowledge of public administration will be gained by the one year placement period a choice of options with a vocational orientation, frequent contact with serving personnel in the public service. the study of cases, and the practical experience of staff.

The Course—The degree course is a 4-year sandwich course.

Part I of the course is intended to provide political sociological legal economic and historical perspectives on the development and nature of public administration by relating the administrative system to the environment in which it operates and from which it has evolved. Part I therefore, is intended to lay the foundation through selected subject areas for subsequent advance studies.

Part II forms a continuing course over the next three years encompassing theoretical and applied aspects of public administration. The second-year course builds on the social, legal political and historical themes introduced in the first year and develops public administration as a discrete area of study. The basic economics course of the first year develops into a specialist study of the economics of public finance and the quantitative methods course develops mathematical and statistical studies in relation to their use in the field of public administration. A further two-year course beginning in the second year examines the theory of organization and the theory and practice of administration. Parallel with this integrated mainstream core is a choice of three vocational options which are intended to allow the student to study a specialized area within the broad field of public administration.

Higher National Diploma in Business Studies (Public Administration option). This two-year full time course provides a sound basis for the development of a career in public administration. The Diploma is a nationally recognized qualification and is awarded by the Business Education Council. The Diploma is recognized by many professional bodies and gives substantial exemption from their examinations.

The Course—a broad first-year course of relevant subjects is followed by an advanced year in which the specialist subjects—Local Government Administrative Practice, Social Policies and Social Needs, and Administrative Law are studied.

Note—The polytechnic runs a variety of part-time courses in Public Administration and has research interests in the local government field. For further details, please contact the Course and Research Director, Public Administration Unit, Teesside Polytechnic.

Higher National Certificate in Public Administration: The subjects being offered in the current course include: Economics of Public Finance, Government and Public Administration, Social Policies and Social Needs, Local Government Administrative Practice.

Certificate in Municipal Administration: The subjects being offered in the current course are broadly similar to those of the HNC in Public Administration. Both these courses are of two years, duration and include one day per week release for employees of public authorities.

Enquiries should be addressed to the Department of Business and Professional Studies, Teesside Polytechnic, Middlesbrough, Cleveland, TS1 3BA (0642 44176).

RADIO AND TELEVISION BROADCASTING FOR SCHOOLS

BRITISH BROADCASTING CORPORATION

The BBC school broadcasting service consists of 96 radio series and 39 television series, a total of 135. The provision covers most subjects in the curriculum and caters for all stages of school life from infants to students of 16 to 18 in school or college. Information about all the broadcast series and the material provided to accompany them is published in the Annual Programme of BBC Radio and Television Broadcasts for age 4–18, which is published each spring for the following school year.

The BBC is guided in the provision of this service by the School Broadcasting Council for the United Kingdom. The Council was formed in 1947, succeeding a similar Council which had been in existence since 1929. The Council has delegated executive powers. It determines policy and stands sponsor for the service vis-à-vis the educational world, which is widely represented on the Council. The BBC's function of translating the Council's wishes into broadcasting is carried out by the BBC's School Broadcasting staff in London, Edinburgh, Cardiff and Belfast under the direction of the Controller, Educational Broadcasting, Mr. D. H. Grattan.

PART I. ROADS

ROAD CONSTRUCTION UNITS

Road Construction Units were set up by the Department of the Environment to carry out the design and supervision of the construction of the major trunk road and motorway projects in England, Each RCU comprises a headquarters office and a number of sub-unit offices in or near the county towns of participating counties.

In charge of each unit is the Director whose office is at the unit headquarters. He has a Deputy Director and a Controller of Administration working to him; the latter heads a section dealing with the various administrative processes involved in road construction. Each sub-unit office is headed by the County Surveyor as Chief Engineer of the sub-unit in a part-time capacity.

NORTH WESTERN ROAD CONSTRUCTION UNIT

Crystal House, Birley Street, Preston, Lancs. PR1 2AQ (0772 54701)

Director: D. F. Dean.

Deputy-Director: D. I. Evans.

Controller of Administration: D. V. Crowther.

The unit covers Lancashire, Cheshire, Cumbria, Merseyside, Greater Manchester. There are sub-unit offices in Preston and Chester.

LANCASHIRE SUB-UNIT, Cross Street, Preston (0772 54733)
Chief Engineer (Part-time): H. A. Yeadon (County Surveyor).

CHESHIRE SUB-UNIT, Backford Hall, nr. Chester, Cheshire (0244 315451)
Chief Engineer (Part-time): V. A. Knight (County Surveyor).

NORTH EASTERN ROAD CONSTRUCTION UNIT

Block 8, Government Buildings, St. George's Road, Harrogate, North Yorkshire (0423 68903)

Director: K. C. Westhorpe.

Deputy-Director: J. C. Beevers.

Controller of Administration: W. J. Roger.

The unit covers Northumberland, Durham, Tyne and Wear, Cleveland, North, West and South Yorkshire, Humberside and part of Lincolnshire.

GREATER LONDON COUNCIL

HIGHWAYS AND TRANSPORT

The GLC is the authority responsible for strategic planning in Greater London. This includes the planning of an integrated system of movement in which all forms of transport are developed.

Public transport plays a major role in the GLC's strategy. The GLC's aim is to provide public transport that is reliable, frequent, comprehensive in its coverage, comfortable and have reasonably priced fares. Interchange between different types of public transport and between them and other methods of transport should be as convenient as possible to encourage the best use of the system as a whole. By reducing congestion on the roads and introducing special measures to help buses, such as bus-only lanes, the level of bus services is being improved. For rail travel, the modernization of track, signalling and railway stock will continue. Stage I of London Transport's new Fleet Line and the extension of the Piccadilly Line to Heathrow are being completed.

The GLC is responsible as highway authority for the construction, maintenance and lighting of about 870 miles of main road designated as "metropolitan" roads. The Department of the Environment is the authority for about 150 miles of trunk roads and motorways and the London Boroughs and the City Corporation are responsible for the remainder of the network. The GLC itself executes most of the constructional work on improvements to main roads, but delegates to the boroughs almost all the maintenance and street lighting.

As traffic authority for all 7,800 miles of roads in Greater London, excluding those the responsibility of the Department of the Environment, the GLC is continually introducing measures to reduce hazards to vehicles and pedestrians, and protect and where possible improve the environment. In conjunction with the Police, the Council is engaged in the progressive introduction of computer control of traffic signals. Already 750 signals in central and west London are controlled in this way, and by the end of 1978 a further 300 signals will be under computer control, covering most of those in London.

Traffic management measures are given legal force by Orders made by the GLC after consultation with the Police, local authorities, representative organizations, etc., and after public notice they are implemented by the borough councils as agents. Care is taken when devising all forms of restriction that they suit local circumstances and operate only during the hours when they are locally necessary.

To reduce traffic congestion, the GLC's policy is to restrain the use of cars particularly to busy parts of London during peak hours. Parking controls and reductions in the number of parking places available are aimed at dissuading commuters from driving into Central London. The amount of parking in new office blocks and other buildings is being strictly limited, and the GLC has asked the Government to introduce legislation to tax parking spaces in existing office blocks. Schemes are being considered for the licensing of public car parks in designated areas which would enable the hours of operation and prices in these car parks to be controlled. The GLC is also engaged on a programme to provide an additional 10,000 car parking spaces at a number of London Transport and British Rail stations in outer London and beyond, with the object of encouraging car commuters to leave their cars at the stations and continue their journeys by rail.

Plans for freight movement are being prepared, to reduce the environmental harm caused by heavy lorries and at the same time provide the right operating conditions for the freight industry. The role of rail and water freight will be expanded. Heavy lorries have been banned from travelling through part of central London, and other area and local bans are being considered.

BRITISH STANDARDS INSTITUTION

British Standards prepared under the authority of the Road Engineering Standards Committee, the Automobile Standards Committee (for current membership see below) and other BSI committees provide specifications for use in contracts, and other guidance on a wide range of items of interest to those concerned with roads and transport, materials, plant and equipment for road construction; lighting and traffic control; automobile components, materials, electrical equipment and signalling; safety equipment. Sectional lists of British Standards for Road Engineering and Automobiles can be obtained from BSI (Sales Office, 101 Pentonville Road, London, N1 9ND)

NATIONAL BUS COMPANY

25 New Street Sq., London, EC4.

The National Bus Company took over responsibility on 1st January 1969, for the state owned bus companies in England and Wales. These companies, of which there are more than fifty, had previously been controlled by the Transport Holding Company. They own assets worth about £100 million, including some 21,000 buses and coaches—more than a quarter of the total number of public service vehicles in Great Britain. The NBC acquired on 1st January 1970, London Country Bus Services Limited, a company formed to take over control of the green country buses and Green Line coaches formerly controlled by London Transport. NBC and British Leyland Motor Corporation interests each own half of the issued ordinary shares in Bus Manufacturers (Holdings) Ltd. The latter owns the whole of the issued shares of the manufacturing companies Bristol Commercial Vehicles Ltd. and Eastern Coach Works Ltd. (formerly one hundred per cent NBC holding) and Leyland National Company Ltd. The Leyland National Company started to trade towards the end of 1971, its new factory in Cumbria producing a new single deck bus for sale in Britain and abroad.

Chairman: F. A. S. Wood. Chief Executive: S. J. B. Skyrme, CBE

PASSENGER TRANSPORT AUTHORITIES

The Minister of Transport exercising his powers under Section 9 of the Transport Act 1968 made Orders designating Passenger Transport areas in which Passenger Transport Authorities were set.

Under the Local Government Act 1972 and with effect from 1st April 1974 the respective new Metropolitan County Councils became the Passenger Transport Authorities for their areas and the ad hoc PTAs referred to above went out of existence.

It is the duty of a PTA to lay down the general policy to be followed by the Passenger Transport Executive in the performance of the functions conferred on the PTA by the Act of 1968.

PUBLIC TRANSPORT IN LONDON

The Transport (London) Act 1969 placed on the Greater London Council, from 1st January 1970, the general duty to develop policies and to encourage, organize and, where appropriate, carry out measures which will promote the provision of integrated, efficient and economic transport facilities and services for Greater London.

The GLC is the strategic transport authority for London and in consultation among other interested bodies, with the Department of the Environment, British Railways Board and the London Transport Executive, is responsible for the preparation of plans for transport in Greater London. One important means by which the GLC has furthered this work has been in the London Rail Study, which was undertaken jointly with these authorities and the report of which was published in January 1975.

The London Transport Executive has been appointed by the Council, as required by the Act, to operate the central (red) buses and the Underground, subject to the overall policy control of the Council. This control includes finance, the general level and structure of fares and the broad level of service, but excludes all day-to-day management and operations, for which the London Transport Executive is itself responsible.

The Council has also appointed, under the Act, a London Transport Passengers Committee, representing the interests of all who use London's buses and underground railways. The Committee have power to make recommendations to the Executive and to the Council about London Transport's services and facilities and to consider representations from or on behalf of transport users (other than in regard to charges or station or line closures).

The London Transport Executive's address is 55 Broadway, SW1H 0BD (Travel enquiries telephone: 01 222 1234; Administrative: 01-222 5600). The London Transport Passengers Committee are at 26 Old Queen St., SW1H 9HP (01-930 8019).

The Green Line and country buses formerly administered by the London Transport Board are now run by London Country Bus Services, Ltd., Bell Street, Reigate, Surrey (Telephone: Reigate 42411), a subsidiary of the National Bus Company.

LONDON TRANSPORT PASSENGERS COMMITTEE

Chairman: F. W. Sturch. Deputy Chairman: D. J. H. Senior, MA. Secretary: C. H. Rogers.

PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY

The Port of London Authority, constituted under the provisions of the Port of London Act 1908, was established on 31st March 1909, further powers being granted in 1910 and subsequent years. The Port of London Act 1968 consolidates and brings up to date the Port of London legislation and also includes some new provisions.

Under the Port of London Authority (Constitution) Revision Order 1975, the membership of the Board consists of a minimum of 9 with a maximum of 17 members.

In addition to the Chairman a minimum of 7 and a maximum of 10 non-executive members are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment. These members are selected from persons who have a wide experience of and have shown capacity in one or more of the following:

> business management, financial matters, sea transport, inland transport, navigation, international commerce, the organization of workers, riverside activities, environmental matters affecting the area of the Port of London.

A minimum of 1 executive member and a maximum of 6 executive members may be appointed by the Board.

The amount of Port Stock issued and outstanding at 31st December, 1975 was £24,157,000 consisting of £8,419,000 "A" stock (ranking in priority as regards security) and £27,449,000 other stock. "A" stock is redeemable at par in 1999 or earlier at the option of the Authority by six months' notice; other Port Stock is redeemable at periods varying from 1978 to 1999.

The borrowing powers unexercised at 31st December, 1975 amounted to £48,628,000. Provision is made for the creation of Sinking Funds for the redemption of Port Stock. The accounts are made up yearly to 31st December, audited by an auditor appointed by the Department of the Environment and are published.

TRANSPORT USERS CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEES

The Central Transport Consultative Committee for Great Britain and the Area Transport Users Consultative Committees for Scotland, Wales and the areas of England described below are appointed by the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection in consultation with the Secretary of State for the Environment under the provisions of Section 56 of the Transport Act, 1962.

The Central Committee consists of a Chairman appointed by the Secretary of State, the chairmen of the Area Committees, and up to six other members appointed by the Secretary of State after consultation with such bodies as appear to her to be representative of the interests of persons likely to be concerned with matters within the competence of the committee. Each Area Committee consists of a Chairman appointed by the Secretary of State, such other members as the Secretary of State appoints after consultation with such bodies as appear to her to be representative of the interests of persons likely to be concerned with matters within the competence of the Committee and up to two other members appointed by the Secretary of State without such consultation.

It is the duty of the Central and Area Committees to consider and, if desirable, to make recommendations with respect to any matter affecting the services and facilities provided by the British Railways Board, the British Transport Docks Board and the National Freight Corporation and any subsidiary of these bodies which has been the subject of representations from users, or which has been referred to them jointly by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection, by a Board, or which seems to them to be a matter which they ought to consider. Copies of the Minutes, conclusions and recommendations of each committee are sent to the Board concerned and, in the case of an Area Committee, to the Central Committee and, in the case of the Central Committee and the Area Committees for Scotland and for Wales, to the Secretaries of State,

In the case of proposals for the withdrawal of all railway passenger services from any line or station, the Area Committees have the duty of considering objections which may be lodged with them by users and of reporting jointly to the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection on the hardship, if any, which they consider will be caused by the proposed closure. At the same time they may make proposals for alleviating that hardship. Copies of their reports are sent to the Central Committee and to the Board concerned.

The Central Committee and the Committees for Scotland and Wales are required to make an annual report to the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection; copies of these reports are laid before Parliament.

The Committee for Scotland also has certain responsibilities to the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Members of the Central Transport Consultative Committee are:

Review by R. A. Emmott, BSc(Econ), IPFA

Secretary, Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy

Layfield

In early 1974 local government finance faced enormous strains of crisis proportions. Rate increases, not only unprecedented but hitherto unimagined, aroused bitter anger, resentment and revolt amongst ratepayers, seeming to threaten the whole fabric of local government. In this atmosphere the Layfield Committee of Enquiry was established "To review the whole system of local government finance in England, Scotland and Wales and to make recommendations". It was charged to report to the Secretary of State by the end of December 1975, and in the event, its report was published in May 1976.

The Layfield Committee Report represents a remarkable achievement given the very tight timetable the Committee was set. The crisis which had caused it to be set up had subsided, but the Report stands as the first comprehensive examination of local government finance since 1914, and the Committee's review of the problems which had caused the crisis revealed that most of them were not new, although they were seriously exacerbated by inflation, reorganization of local government and other factors. In the Committee's view the crisis was symptomatic of lasting problems, and exposed not simply the weak points of an otherwise sound system, but "a collection of financial arrangements whose objectives were not clear and which had never been properly related to each other".

The Report argues that the main weakness is a confusion between the government and local authorities over responsibility for local spending. The central theme of the report therefore is the need for improved accountability and a clear identification of responsibility for spending decisions.

Layfield poses a choice between systems based mainly on central or local responsibility. In either case, the Report concludes that the rating system with modifications must continue to provide a substantial part of local revenue. But if local authorities are given more responsiblity for spending decisions, they would need to be provided with an extra source of revenue.

The Layfield Committee consider various possible additional sources of revenue, and come firmly to the conclusion that the best candidate would be a local income tax.

Other conclusions of the Layfield Report include:

(a) The principle of general grant should be retained, but an additional source of revenue should make it possible to reduce the grant percentage.

(b) Domestic rates should be based on capital rather than rental values, and the normal method of payment should be by instalments. Agricultural land and buildings should cease to be exempt from rates.

(c) A new central forum should be instituted to improve the flow of information between the central government and local authorities, in order to keep financial relationships under continual review.

(d) In the pursuit of 'value for money', the audit arrangements should be devised to provide an audit service totally independent of both central and local government, with a "higher institution", to which reports of the audit service would be submitted. The new audit service would be able to improve training and experience, and carry out special efficiency investigations.

(e) The chief financial officer of a local authority should have a statutory obligation to report directly and regularly to the Council on defined financial issues, such as:
  (i) the financial position of the authority;
  (ii) financial implications of current policies;
  (iii) comparative costs and methods of finance;
  (iv) standards of financial administration.

(f) Services (such as education) should stay with local government wherever there is some local discretion.

Public Expenditure

The White Paper 'Public Expenditure to 1979–80' (Cmnd. 6393) projects local authority expenditure trends as follows:

	£ million 1975 Survey prices
	1975–76	1976–77	1977–78	1978–79	1979–80
Current expenditure	7,770	7,782	7,765	7,720	7,760
Capital:
Key sector	2,797	2,390	2,267	2,242	2,202
Locally determined	560	499	469	389	378
Capital total	3,357	2,889	2,736	2,631	2,580
Total Capital/Current	11,127	10,671	10,501	10,351	10,340

The figures show a standstill in current expenditure and sharp reductions in capital expenditure - key sector capital expenditure is reduced by 21·3% over the period, locally determined schemes expenditure by 32·5%. The overall reduction is about 7%, compared with the high and steady increases of recent experience.

The White Paper is concerned to demonstrate the Government's intention to contain public spending aginst the requirements of the current economic situation and to support the objective of defeating inflation. It is proposed to monitor spending more closely throughout the year, and to make wider use of "cash limits" to control cash outlays as they occur, instead of accepting the cash payment consequences of programmes previously determined. Local government is clearly being expected to play a major part in this effort.

Rate Support Grant

The 1976–77 rate support grant settlement brought a reduction in the percentage level from 66·5% to 65·5% coupled with the imposition of cash limits. In money terms there is a considerable increase, as relevant expenditure for 1976–77 was determined at £10,461 m (November 1975 prices), an increase of £2,290 m or 28% over the corresponding figure of £8,171 m for 1975–76 (at November 1974 prices).

For 1976–77 total expenditure has been fixed within a prescribed amount, so that local government may not, in future, receive grant on the full effects of pay and price increases. An amount of £480 m grant (equivalent to £730 m relevant expenditure) was included in the settlement to provide for pay and price increases after November 1975. This may be intended to operate as an effective limit, but it will be reviewed in certain defined circumstances, such as where new legislation or government policies impose additional expenditure on authorities, or where the pace of inflation is substantially higher than that implied in the cash limit.

The effect of this provision on rate levels will be dependent on authorities' views of the prospective rate of inflation at budgeting time compared with the rate of inflation implied by the cash limit. The Government have not sought or taken any direct powers to control the level of expenditure in individual authorities and continue to rely on the influence of the grant arrangement and detailed exhortation.

CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL ON LOCAL GOVERNMENT FINANCE

(A Forum organized by the Department of the Environment)

The Council serves as a forum for discussion of broad issues which concern central and local government and which have important financial implications. It is intended to complement other channels of communication between local government and individual government departments.

The Council met for the first time in May 1975. The Secretary of State for the Environment takes the chair, and meetings are attended by ministers from other departments and by representatives of the Local Authority Associations. Meetings are held quarterly or more often as necessary.

An additional Council has been set up for Wales, chaired by the Secretary of State for Wales, and in Scotland there are arrangements for regular ministerial meetings with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

THE LOCAL AUTHORITIES' MUTUAL INVESTMENT TRUST

Winchester Hse., 77 London Wall, London, EC2N 1DB (01-588 1815).

Chairman: F. D. Pickering, CBE.
Vice-Chairman: J. McKnight, MBE.
Director: J. R. Green, BCom, IPFA.
Secretary: D. F. Hart.
Advisory Panel: E. M. Dawson; W. T. J. Griffin, FCA; Sir Dennis Pilcher, CBE, FRICS; A. G. Touche, FCA.

The Local Authorities' Mutual Investment Trust is a company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1948, limited by guarantee and not having a share capital. It was brought into being pursuant to Section 11 of the Trustee Investments Act, 1961, by the Associations of local authorities in England and Wales and in Scotland for the purpose of providing local authorities with facilities for collective investment and with an investment advisory service.

The Trust is wholly controlled by persons appointed by the Associations and its main functions are (without profit to itself or remuneration for its members) to manage three common Investment Funds which it has established and to provide an investment advisory service for individual authorities. The affairs of the Trust are managed by a Council of nineteen members assisted by four Investment Advisors well known for their investment experience. The day to day management of the Investment Funds is the responsibility of a Director appointed by the Council.

The three Investment Funds referred to above are the Wider Range Fund, which is invested in ordinary shares and freehold and long leasehold property, and had a capital of approximately £40 million in March 1976; the Narrower Range Fund, invested in fixed interest stocks, having a capital at that date of rather more than £3 million; and the Property Fund with a capital of approximately £45 million which is invested in real property and is open to authorities with powers to invest in properties or property unit trusts. The majority of the funds contributed for investment represent superannuation monies: these are of a long term nature and the investment policy of the Trust has been framed accordingly. The main objective of the Wider Range Fund and the Property Fund is to protect and if possible to increase the real value of contributors' capital and of the income derived from it. Regard is had to the total return, capital and income combined. The main object of the Narrower Range Fund is to achieve a high sustainable level of income bearing in mind the need for security of contributors' capital and the maintenance of its value over a period at least in money terms. Broadly speaking participating authorities would be justified in looking to the Narrower Range Fund for a high level of current income and to the Wider Range Fund and the Property Fund for long term growth. There are 165 authorities contributing directly to the Funds.

The Wider Range Investment Fund possesses extended investment powers conferred by statute enabling it to invest, inter alia, in overseas securities and real property. In March 1976 the Fund had some £9 million invested in real property and some £4 million invested in the United States of America and other overseas countries. Investment in the Wider Range Fund does not count as an investment in real property for the purpose of the quantitative limitation of administering authorities' powers in this respect.

The Funds are valued at the end of each month. The value of a Unit is then determined, and it is at that value (plus a surcharge to cover the cost of investment) that new contributions are accepted into the Funds, and units allotted to local authorities. Income is distributed half yearly to unit holders, in March and in September. The Funds are not liable to Capital Gains Tax and contributing authorities are enabled to recover United Kingdom income tax deducted from or credited against income.

For the latest information about the Funds, application should be made to the Secretary.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT AUDIT

Local authorities spend large sums of money, derived mainly from rates and taxes and external audit has an important part to play in the maintenance of public confidence in these bodies. Part VIII of the Local Government Act 1972 contains the external audit provisions in relation to local authorities in England and Wales.

The Act provides for a choice between the district auditor and an "approved" auditor. An approved auditor must be a member of one of the principal accountancy bodies and his appointment must be approved by the Secretary of State for the Environment.

District auditors are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment but they are independent officers and are not subject to his direction or control. England and Wales are divided for audit purposes into a number of audit districts each with a district auditor; a list of their names, addresses and telephone numbers appear under Department of the Environment in Section 31.

In carrying out their audits, district auditors have quasi-judicial powers to deal with matters of illegality, misconduct or failure to bring money to account. If a district auditor considers that an item of account is contrary to law, he may apply to the courts for a declaration to that effect. The court may make, or refuse, such a declaration, and if it makes a declaration, order the accounts to be rectified, and, if relevant, order those responsible for incurring or authorizing such expenditure to repay it. Where the amount involved exceeds £2,000 and the person responsible is a member of a local authority, the court may also order disqualification from membership. Where it appears to a district auditor that there has been a failure to account or that loss has been incurred through wilful misconduct, he certifies the sum to be due from the person responsible. Disqualification ensues in cases of wilful misconduct where the amount exceeds £2,000. District auditors are also required to hear any objections made by local government electors to items in the accounts.

Where circumstances arise on accounts audited by an approved auditor which require the exercise of the above powers, they are brought into operation by the Secretary of State directing a district auditor to hold an extraordinary audit.

The audit procedure provides for certain formalities to be observed: e.g.

1. Deposit of accounts and vouchers to enable interested persons to inspect and copy any of the documents deposited.
2. Notice by advertisement in the local press by the local authority of the time and place of holding the audit and where the accounts etc., may be inspected.

During the audit any elector may question the auditor about the accounts and the auditor may demand the production of documents relating to the accounts.

Review by T. N. WATKINS, MIFireE, AMBIM

Chief Fire Officer, Derbyshire County Council and Honorary Secretary of The Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers' Association

With the teething troubles of the new brigades, born out of local government reorganization, fading into history the Service looks forward to a period of consolidation of the first two years. The short-term plans, immediately necessary to the amalgamation, such as administrative procedures communications and mobilizing systems, are now in the main completed and the officers and men settled to their new tasks. It is now time that brigades should be looking toward their longer-term plans, appliance and premises replacement programmes and the introduction of more sophisticated techniques, in order to keep the service abreast of the demands placed on it. Over this need for progress hangs the black cloud of financial restraint which is darkening the Fire Service horizon as much as elsewhere in the public sector. Like most local authority services, the Fire Service is labour intensive and cuts in this field are difficult to achieve, consequently it may well be that many long term plans will have to be deferred or even shelved for ever, very much to the detriment of the Service.

With the annual fire loss again in excess of £200 million (£212·7 million in 1975, a figure not taking into account consequential loss, lost productions, lost orders and exports) a great responsibility falls on the service to do all in its power to cut this wastage. This can only be achieved by greater efforts in fire prevention, which would require more trained officers to cope with increased legislation, and greater efficiency in operational standards which requires better equipment, better appliances and better training facilities. The British Fire Service has the expertise to make improvements, but improvements do cost money and a "treading water" situation may have to be maintained until the required finance is available to go forward again.

Recruitment and Manning

The problems of the introduction of the 48-hour week for firemen have been overcome by most brigades, despite early difficulties, the general recession in industry giving the service the opportunity to recruit the required number of personnel. Apart from the introduction of the shorter working week, several other factors have helped to increase the number of recruits required by brigades. An increase in the required number of officers to counter the shorter working week for residential officers and the increase in fire prevention work, and the loss of experienced personnel failing the compulsory over-40 medical examination, have both had an effect on the number of new recruits required. A new dimension appeared in 1975 to further reduce the ranks of experienced men, the Fire Service Pension Scheme—Reckoning of War Service. This allows serving firemen and officers who joined the service within a specified time of leaving one of the Armed Services following the 1939–45 war to count half of that war service time towards their pensionable service. All this movement has resulted in an increase in the number of young officers promoted to replace men of considerable experience and a consequent lowering of the average age and experience of operational crews with all the attendant ramifications.

1975 also gave us the Sex Discrimination Act which could have some considerable effect on the Fire Service. The Service is no stranger to sexual equality as for many years several brigades have employed women in their control rooms, both exclusively and integrated with male operators. However, the prospect of "firefighters" as opposed to firemen is a new concept for brigades to ponder. Although a general doubt has been expressed at the feasibility of woman performing the arduous physical tasks of firefighting, no exemption from the Act has been made and should a female candidate pass both the educational and physical tests, a brigade could not legally bar her from becoming a firefighter.

While wholetime recruitment has been satisfactory, the maintenance of numbers in the part-time service has become increasingly difficult. Many stations have problems in providing full strength crews particularly during the day Monday to Friday. This would appear to be the result of a number of factors; amongst these are the reluctance of employers to release men during working hours, the migration of the working population away from villages and a general public apathy towards providing service to the community. The instruction by the Fire Brigades Union that their wholetime members should not perform part-time duties has further increased the problem.

Fire Prevention

Statistically, fire prevention occupies more time than actual fire fighting though the attendant training and maintenance of equipment increases the time needed for operational purposes. However, greater time has had to be found to deal with the ever-increasing fire prevention load and most brigades have now accepted the need to involve all ranks in this work.

The Fire Precautions Act has gained momentum since its introduction, but some concern has been expressed at premises which are "hotels" but are slipping through loopholes in the Act. This was highlighted by the particular fires, two in London and one in Brighton in such premises, where lives have been lost. It is hoped that further designating orders will plug these holes. These further orders, plus any made under the Health and Safety at Work Act and the responsibility of Petroleum Legislation will all add to the workload of hard-pressed fire prevention departments.

One major concern is the rise in arson, particularly in school premises. In the early 1960s the average number of fires in schools per annum was less than 900 with malicious ignition a minor cause. By 1974, the number of fires had more than doubled with 53% caused by arson, and there is every indication that this trend is continuing.

Training

Progressive training based on career structure has been implemented at the Fire Service Colleges at Moreton-in-Marsh and Dorking. Following appointment to leading fireman, a man will receive training at regular intervals, in fire prevention, operational procedures and management to fit him for further promotion. The concludion of the programmed structure is the Senior Command Course, with special selection, for officers of Divisional Officer rank. The Colleges also provided facilities for seminars for Chief and Assistant Chief Officers.

In addition to its training for the British Fire Service a great advance has been made in training overseas officers. In the summer of 1975 the first Overseas Command Course was held at Dorking, attended by 12 senior officers from Africa, the Middle East, the West Indies and Australia. A steady flow of officers, particularly from the Middle East and the developing African countries are attending courses at the Technical College and many spend periods with Brigades throughout the country.

Research and Development

Despite the financial restrictions the Service continues to attempt to improve and up-date and Chief Officers agree that it could be disastrous to cease research into new ideas completely. Among the many developments being considered possibly two stand out. The consideration of the use of computers with particular regard to their use in mobilizing systems and the recording and storage of technical data such as information on major risks, hazards, chemicals and water supplies, is causing great interest and already progress has been made to link brigades with a computer-based data bank on hazardous materials at U.K. Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell. Increased congestion in towns and the growth of pedestrian shopping precincts, together with the need to increase safety for crews, has prompted brigades to look closely at appliance design. 1975 saw a commercially produced "new fire engine" with several revolutionary features and a strong emphasis on crew safety. The manufacturers deserve some recognition of their courage to produce something different at this particular time, and despite all the reservations it is certain there will have to be some move from the "conventional" fire engine to meet all the future demands.

This review would appear to add up to gloomy pictures of 1975/76 for the Fire Service, with large fire losses, even though there was a reduction on the 1974 figure, financial restraint and industrial relation problems. There was, however, one high point in 1975, the Interfire Exhibition held at Earls Court in July. The exhibition was on similar lines to that of 1965, but the participation of the C.T.I.F. (Comité Techniques International de Prevention et d'Extinction de Feu), an International Fire Services Organization, was a significant feature. The British Fire Service is doing much to share its experience with other nations and a step towards greater integration with countries of the European Community can only lead to benefits on both sides of the Channel.

The BAEGE Range of

BAEGE HAIR DRYER

- Both hair and head are effectively dried by twin streams of hot air.
- High throughput of air prevents the risk of scalding.
- Air intakes are not accessible and air outlets are protected to deter vandalism.
- Can be operated by normal on/off switch or, where required by a coin-operated switch.
- Elements are fitted with an overload thermostat.
- Extremely robust steel construction with moulding shaped to head contour.

BAEGE HAND DRYER

- More economical in use than other methods, even paper towels.
- Improved Standards of Hygiene, no more dirty towels.
- Simple to install.
- No waste of electricity, 40 secs. automatic time control switch.
- Already installed by several County Councils.
- Fitted with 2 Turbo-Fans and 2 elements for fastest heating up and Hot air turbulence.

Here is the modern method of hygienic hand drying that reduces costs and eliminates unhealthy towels. Switches off automatically, therefore no electrical waste.

CHIEF ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH OFFICERS: NAMES, ADDRESSES AND TELEPHONE NUMBERS SEE SECTION 40.

Review by R. JOHNSON, DPA, FEHA
Secretary: The Environmental Health Officers Association

Environmental Health Staff

At a time when increasing demands are being put upon environmental health officers, through new legislation and additional responsibilities, it is unfortunate that a shortage of these officers still exists. The establishment of environmental health officers has remained unchanged for several years at around 6,000 but the number of vacancies, over 1,000, is cause for concern. The situation is being closely studied by the Environmental Health Officers Association and by the Environmental Health Officers Education Board. A comprehensive investigation into recruitment, training, qualifications and employment of environmental health staff is in progress. This involves the NJC, the local authority associations and other organizations.

In August, 1976 local authorities were told that there should be no increases in revenue expenditure on rate fund services and this has meant that all departments have had to assess priorities and deploy staff and resources to the best possible advantage. Whilst the Government will be looking for substantial economies during the next few years it is essential that limitations on staff recruitment should not restrict the training of students; this is very necessary with regard to student environmental health officers.

Pollution Control

The fifth report from the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution reviewed methods of control of air pollution from domestic and industrial sources and also the relationship between the central and local government inspectorates. The report recommended the transfer of H.M. Alkali and Clean Air Inspectorate from the Health and Safety Executive back to the Department of the Environment to become part of a new H.M. Pollution Inspectorate. The new inspectorate could be responsible for dealing with all types of pollution arising from industrial processes where difficult control problems exist. The Commission saw considerable scope for co-operation between H.M. Alkali and Clean Air Inspectorate and environmental health officers.

On 1st January, 1976 Part III of the Control of Pollution Act came into operation and the Department of the Environment issued detailed guidance on implementation in Circular 2/76. This part of the Act is designed to strengthen local authorities' powers to control environmental noise. The emphasis of the Act is on prevention rather than cure, although the latter is not neglected. The Act gives control over noise from construction sites, noise from loudspeakers in streets and enables district councils to introduce the new concept of "noise abatement zones". It also modifies the procedure for dealing with noise nuisances.

Health and Safety at Work

Although the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act came into operation on 1st January, 1975 local authorities were, for some considerable time, limited in implementing procedures under the Act to those premises for which they had been responsible under previous legislation. Proposals for regulations allocating specific duties to local authorities were the subject of lengthy periods of consultation. In general terms, local authorities are responsible for "non-industrial activities".

The Health and Safety Executive have been obtaining views from a large number of organizations on draft Codes of Practice dealing with numerous subjects which will supplement regulations.

Food

Power to close premises

For some time the Environmental Health Officers Association has been urging that the powers available to a few district councils, through Private Acts, for the prompt closure of insanitary food premises should be available in national legislation.

In 1976 a Private Member's Bill was introduced by Mr. Andrew Bowden, MP with the object of giving all district councils that important power when food premises are found to be in a condition dangerous to health.

EEC and Poultry

EEC Directive 71/118 which prescribes hygiene standards for poultry slaughter-houses was made before the UK joined the EEC. It was accepted in the accession negotiations and has applied to intra-Community trade in fresh poultry meat since the middle of 1973.

The Directive was due to apply to home trade from February 1976. It was realized that occupiers of premises would need more time to comply with the structural requirements of the Directive and it would also have been impossible to organize an inspection service by that date. Further, except for farm gate sales trade in uneviscerated poultry would also have been prohibited by February, 1976.

In August, 1975 the Minister announced an agreement on an amending Directive (75/431) which provided for various concessions, including a deferment until August, 1979 of the operation of an inspection service.

The Environmental Health Officers Association continued its policy of trying to secure an interpretation of the Directive more appropriate to the well tested food control system within the UK.

In December, 1975 the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food circulated for comment its draft Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations prepared by MAFF to give effect to the requirements of the Directive. Whilst accepting the principles of the proposed regulations there have been many objections to suggested methods of enforcement and points of detail. The Ministry aimed to have the regulations made as quickly as possible and to come into operation on 1st January, 1977. There have also been many reservations about the recruitment and training of the poultry meat inspectors envisaged by MAFF as undertaking the inspection role under veterinary supervision.

Housing

The policy that emerged from the Housing Act, 1974 emphasized the Government's intention to steer towards a course of improvement rather than clearance. The Circulars that followed the Act recommended a policy of gradual, flexible and continuous renewal together with improvement and a re-appraisal of existing redevelopment areas.

A multi-disciplinary or corporate approach to housing renewal and improvement became essential. Public participation has been a further significant aspect in this development. There are, however, long term implications in this policy and whilst renewal and improvement are admirable those dwellings which cannot be successfully renovated must be demolished. There must be a total and co-ordinated approach. Much depends upon finance and this must be an absolute priority; if approval of schemes is withheld in order to phase finance over a number of years then the new approach will fail. An emergency programme is necessary to deal with the crisis which always seems to exist in housing matters. Because of the imposition of staffing and financial restraints on local authority expenditure soon after the passing of the Housing Act 1974 progress in this period is not expected to have reached the desired level.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE REORGANIZATION

As a result of the National Health Service Reorganisation Act 1973, new health authorities were established on 1st April 1974 to which a number of functions at present carried out by local authorities were transferred, e.g.

Domiciliary nursing midwifery and health visiting ambulance service
school medical and dental services

Local Councils' medical, nursing and auxiliary staff were transferred to the national health service authorities who will make such staff available to local government as may be required.

For further details of the reorganized National Health Service please see Section 14.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON ENVIRONMENTAL POLLUTION

The terms of reference of the Royal Commission, which was set up in February 1970, are as follows:

"To advise on matters, both national and international, concerning the pollution of the environment; on the adequacy of research in this field; and the future possibilities of danger to the environment."

Chairman: Sir Brian Flowers.

Secretary: L. F. Rutterford, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, Church Hse., Great Smith St., London, SW1P 3BL (01-212 8620).

CLEAN AIR COUNCIL

Department of the Environment, Queen Anne's Chambers, 28 Broadway, London, SW1H 9JU. (Tel: 01-273 5032).

The Council has been established under Section 23 of the Clean Air Act 1956, for the purposes of:

"(a) keeping under review the progress made (whether under this Act or otherwise) in abating the pollution of the air in England and Wales; and

"(b) obtaining the advice of persons having special knowledge, experience or responsibility in regard to prevention of pollution of the air."

It is a consultative body which came into being on 8th May, 1957.

The constitution of the Council provides that it shall consist of the Chairman, four Vice-Chairmen and not more than 30 members appointed by the Minister. Members hold office for not more than three years, and are eligible for reappointment.

Members of the Council are as follows:

R. N. Bottini, CBE, Gen. Sec., National Union of Agricultural and Allied Workers.
Prof. T. J. Chandler, MSc, PhD, Professor of Geography, Manchester University.
H. Darnell, MEng, CEng, MIEE, British Steel Corporation.

Dr. L. Wise, BSc, MB, ChB, FRCPath, Consultant Pathologist.

NOISE ADVISORY COUNCIL

The Council is a non-statutory body which was established in April 1970 to:

"Keep under review the progress made generally in preventing and abating the generation of noise, to make recommendations to Ministers with responsibility in this field and to advise on such matters as they may refer to the Council."

It is an advisory body of which the Secretary of State for the Environment is the Chairman. The Council has within its ambit all aspects of noise prevention and abatement within the limits set by security considerations in the defence field.

Members are appointed by the Secretary of State for an initial period of not more than three years and are eligible for reappointment.

Members of the Council

Mrs. E. B. Atlee, Chairman, Molesey Residents Association.
J. B. Butterworth, MA, DL, JP, Vice-Chancellor of University of Warwick.
I. M. Campbell, BSc, CEng, FICE, FCIT, Exec. Director, Systems & Operations, British Railways.
Dr. H. Cohen, JP, Alderman, Race Relations Board, Conciliation Committee for Wales.
Prof. B. L. Clarkson, BSc, PhD, Director, Institute of Sound & Vibration Research, Southampton University.
E. Epson, LDS, RCS(Eng), OBE, Chairman, Gatwick Airport Consultative Committee.
D. B. Harrison, LLM, Local Government Commissioner.
Dr. C. F. Herridge, MA, MB, BChir, MRCPsych, DPM, Consultant Psychiatrist.
Prof. G. M. Lilley, MSc(Eng), DIC, CEng, FRAeS, MIMechE, FIMA, Department of Aeronautics & Astronautics, Southampton University.
G. Lloyd, Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians.
Dr. J. S. McFarlane, MA, PhD, FIM, Director of Engineering Companies.
R. H. Macmillan, MA, CEng, Director, Motor Industry Research Association.
Mrs. N. H. Mansbridge, Mental Welfare Council for Scotland.
A. J. Percival, BA, FSA, Civic Trust.
F. Reynolds, CEng, FRSH, MEHA, FInstF, Chief Environmental Health Officer for Leeds.
Prof. E. J. Richards, OBE, MA, DSc, CEng, FRAeS, FIMechE, Vice-Chancellor, University of Technology, Loughborough.
G. E. Schoon, MCD, BArch, FRTPI, RIBA, County Planning Officer for Buckinghamshire.
J. T. Stamper, MA, CEng, FRAeS, Technical Director of Hawker Siddeley Aircraft Company Ltd.
Mrs. S. F. Stern, MA, Housewife.
Dr. H. P. Stout, BA, PhD, FTI, AInstP, Department of Industrial Science, Stirling University.
R. M. Taylor, Noise Control Consultant.
Prof. W. Taylor, BSc, PhD, MD, MRCP(Ed), Dept. of Social & Occupational Medicine, Dundee University.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE REORGANIZATION

ENGLAND AND WALES

The Reorganized Service

After consultations with the various professions and organizations concerned, a White Paper (Cmnd 5055) was published on 1 August 1972 setting out in detail the plans for the reorganized Service. The new National Health Service started on 1 April 1974. The personal social services had already been brought together under the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970 (effective from 1 January 1971) and far-reaching changes were made in local government under the Local Government Act 1972 which also came into force on 1 April 1974. In March 1976 a Government discussion paper was issued on priorities for spending in the next four years, and reference is made to this under the heading "Finance" on a later page. The consultative document was the Government's first attempt to establish rational and systematic priorities throughout the health and personal services.

Services in the Reorganized National Health Service

Under the reorganized National Health Service the Secretary of State has power "(a) to provide such services as he considers appropriate for the purpose of discharging any duty imposed on him by the Health Service Acts; and (b) to do any other thing whatsoever which is calculated to facilitate, or is conducive or incidental to, the discharge of such a duty."

The services which have been brought together are:

a. The hospital and specialist services previously administered by the Regional Hospital Boards, Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Governors of undergraduate Teaching Hospitals;

b. the Family Practitioner Services previously administered by the Executive Councils;

c. the personal health services previously administered by local health authorities; and

d. the school health service previously administered by the Local Education Authorities.

The personal health services are those which were formerly referred to the local authority's health committee under the NHS Acts 1946 and 1968 and the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970. They include ambulance services; epidemiological work; family planning; health centres; health visiting; home nursing and midwifery; maternity and child health care; medical, nursing and supplementary arrangements for the prevention of illness, care and after care and vaccination and immunization.

The health authorities now have comprehensive health education powers as part of their responsibility for the preventioon of illness.

General Organization

Under the new organization, the Department of Health and Social Security has a central strategic planning role and a responsibility for monitoring the working of the service as a whole. The Regional Health Authorities are responsible for regional planning, the allocation of resources to Area Health Authorities and the monitoring of their activities. Area Health Authorities will be responsible for the operational management of health services and for planning within their areas.

Strong professional advisory machinery has been built into the new structure. It functions at each level of management, and ensures that the Regional Health Authorities and Area Health Authorities and their staffs make decisions in the full knowledge of expert opinion. It also ensures that at all levels the main health professions are consulted and can contribute to the planning and operation of the NHS.

Regional Health Authorities

There are 14 Regional Health Authorities, each with one or more University medical schools within its boundaries.

The RHA forms part of the chain of responsibility running from the Secretary of State to each AHA. The Chairman and members of the RHA are appointed by the Secretary of State after consultations with interested organizations, including the Universities, the main local authorities, the main health professions and workers' organizations. Members are unpaid (but entitled to travelling and other allowances) but the Chairman is paid on a part-time basis.

One of the main tasks of the RHA is to develop strategic plans and priorities based on a review of the needs identified by the AHAs and on its judgement of the right balance between individual areas' claims on resources. It is also responsible for identifying, in consultation with the AHAs, services which need a regional rather than an area approach and arranging for their provision. It is responsible for the development of an overall regional plan for specialist services (paying particular attention to the provision and location of rarer specialties).

The RHA has a special responsibility for ensuring—with the Universities and AHAs concerned—that satisfactory service facilities are provided to support medical and dental teaching and research.

It is for the RHA to allocate resources between the AHAs, after having agreed area plans with them, and to monitor their performance. The most important of the RHA's executive functions is the design and construction of new building and works. The RHA will itself undertake the more important projects, subject to any necessary approval by the central Department and to guidance on such matters as design and cost standards and building techniques and methods. All other new building work will be the responsibility of the AHAs, subject to any necessary approval and guidance by the RHA.

The RHA employs architects, engineers and quantity surveyors not only for its own work but also to help AHAs with their building projects. Responsibility for operation and maintenance of engineering plant and services and for the maintenance of existing premises will be delegated to the AHAs subject to regional supervision.

It is also one of the tasks of the RHA to see that there is effective co-ordination and collaboration between adjacent AHAs.

Area Health Authorities

There are 90 Area Health Authorities whose boundaries match those of the non metropolitan counties and metropolitan districts of local government. In London the health authority boundaries correspond to those of an individual London Borough in four cases, and two, three or, in one case, four London Boroughs grouped together in the remaining 12 cases.

The AHA is the operational NHS authority, responsible for assessing needs in its area and for planning, organizing and administering area health services to meet them. It also employs the staff who work at area headquarters and in the districts.

For a period, however, medical and dental consultants and senior registrars, except those working in the teaching areas, will continue to be appointed at regional level. This arrangement will be reviewed in 1979 when the new Service will have been in operation for 5 years.

The AHA is also responsible for services such as catering and domestic as well as for other supportive services which back up the health professions and, in so doing, contribute to patient care.

The Chairman of the AHA is appointed by the Secretary of State after consultation with the Chairman of the Regional Health Authority. Total membership ranges from 15 to 26, four appointed by the corresponding local authority (more for most AHAs in the London area), one by the University concerned (area with substantial teaching facilities will be administered by Area Health Authorities (Teaching)) and the remaining members appointed by the RHA after consultations with the main health professions, workers and other organizations. An AHA always includes doctors and at least one nurse or midwife, but otherwise the proportion of professional members is not prescribed. Members are unpaid (but entitled to travelling and other allowances) but the Chairman is paid on a part-time basis.

The day to day running of the services for which the AHA is responsible is based on health districts, which will usually have a population of between 150,000 and 300,000. There is generally between one and six districts in each area.

Under the reorganized NHS the status of general and dental practitioners, ophthalmic medical practitioners, opticians and pharmacists as independent contractors has remained. To administer the contracts each AHA has set up a Family Practitioner Committee which will deal with the central Department on contractual matters. It has 30 members: 15 appointed by the professions; 11 by the AHA (at least one being an AHA member) and four by the local authority entitled to appoint members to the AHA. The Chairman is appointed by the Committee from among its own members. The staff serving the FPC is employed by the AHA, but the Committee is always consulted before senior appointments are made.

Central Department

As hitherto, the Secretary of State continues to have responsibility to Parliament for the National Health Service as a whole and determines national policy. The Department of Health and Social Security assists him in the following ways:

(a) Settling the kind, scale and balance of service to be provided in regions and areas.

(b) Guiding, supporting and (to the extent that this is desirable) controlling RHAs. Here it is the Department's job to help the authorities to understand the guide-lines and the reasoning behind them. It also allocates to the RHAs the necessary resources.

(c) Obtaining or developing resources which strongly influence the adequacy, efficiency and economy of the services. This requires specialist work on particular resources — personnel; finance; property and building; supply. The Department has a special responsibility in relation to staffing — for instance, forecasting staff requirements, planning the number of training places, etc.

(d) Carrying out other functions which are best organized centrally such as some types of research, standardization and preparation of national statistics. The NHS superannuation scheme continues to be centrally administered.

(e) Supporting the Secretary of State in his Parliamentary and public duties.

At the national level, the Department must have available to it expert opinion on a wide range of matters, many of which are highly technical, relating to the provision of the NHS. Advisory bodies remain the main source of this advice. The constitutions and terms of reference of the Central Health Services Council and its Standing Advisory Committees have been adjusted as necessary to meet the needs of the new Service. For instance, the new Council has among its members some people specifically appointed to advise from the patient's viewpoint.

Community Health Councils

These new Councils represent the views of the consumer. There is one for each of the area's health districts. At least one half of the members of the Council are appointed by the local authorities of which the area or part of it is included in the Community Health Council's district, at least one third by voluntary bodies concerned locally with the NHS, and the remainder by the RHA after consultations with other organizations. The number of members varies according to local circumstances but there are usually up to 30. Members are unpaid, but entitled to travelling and other expenses. Councils appoint their own Chairman from among their members.

The Council's basic job is to represent to the AHA the interests of the public in the health service in its district. Councils have powers to secure information, to visit hospitals and other institutions, and they have access to the AHA and in particular to its senior officers administering the district services. Councils may bring to the notice of the AHA potential causes of local complaint, but their function is distinct from that of the AHA's complaints machinery and of the Health Service Commissioner.

The AHA must consult the Community Health Council(s) on its plans for Health Service developments — e.g. closures of hospitals or departments of hospitals or their change of use. The full AHA will meet representatives of all its Community Health Councils at least once a year; this is in addition to the less formal meetings between the Council's representatives and various officers of the AHA. The Council will publish an annual report (and may publish other reports) and the AHA is required to publish replies recording action taken on the issues raised.

Proposals are under consideration for community health councils to be directly represented on area health authorities.

Medical and Dental Teaching

Under the reorganized NHS high priority continues to be given to providing facilities in support of medical and dental teaching carried out by the Universities and in support of associated research. Areas which have substantial facilities of this kind are known as "teaching areas" and the AHAs which administer them are called AHA(T)s. Whereas the AHA without substantial teaching and research facilities has only one member nominated by the University the AHA(T) has two (three of them at a dental school). It also has at least two additional members with teaching hospital experience — more if the area includes more than one teaching hospital (or groups of hospitals of a kind hitherto designated as a single teaching hospital).

Administrative unification is essential if there is to be a properly balanced development of community and hospital facilities to meet the needs of teaching, of research and of services to the public. For this and for other reasons, the teaching areas are administered as part of the regions in which they are situated. But at the same time the hospitals' individual identity and historic traditions have been preserved. The teaching hospital will have a central role in the health services for the district in which it is situated. There will be close links between the AHA(T) and those responsible for the administration of the teaching hospital. The close working relationships which have always been maintained between the teaching hospitals and their associated medical and dental schools will continue. It is intended that each RHA will receive in its financial allocation from the Department a specific identified allowance for teaching and research.* The Department, in its review of regional plans and estimates, will see that a proper balance is kept between teaching and non-teaching areas.

The RHAs are responsible for seeing that there are satisfactory arrangements for postgraduate medical and dental education and training. To enable them to do this they are advised by regional postgraduate education committees which are distinct from the regional university liaison committees which will advise the RHAs on their responsibilities for providing facilities in support of university medical and dental teaching of students and associated research.

The teaching hospitals' contribution to the reorganized Health Service will be a growing one, but during the early years it was felt that there should be some additional safeguards as reassurance that full weight will indeed be given to the importance of teaching and research functions. For this reason, on the first appointment of the AHA(T)s, the members appointed for their teaching hospital experience have been appointed by the Secretary of State from among the members of the former Boards of Governors and University Hospital Management Committees.

The Staff of the Service

Nearly 70% of the running costs of the NHS are incurred on salaries and wages. Under the reorganized Service, professional and occupational training will be complemented by management training, most of which will be multi-professional and will take account of the close relationship between the objectives of the NHS and those of the local authority social services.

The NHS Staff Commission has advised on the arrangements for recruiting and transferring staff to the new authorities and continues in being to advise on problems arising from reorganization, and to consider representations from staff related to their transfer. The work which the former National Staff Committee and the National Nursing Staff Committee did on behalf of hospital administrative and clerical staff on the one hand and of hospital nurses and midwives on the other is being built on in the new Service and developed to meet the needs of an integrated Service. In order to do this, the existing Committees have been reconstituted as the National Staff Committee for Administrative and Clerical Staff and as the National Staff Committee for Nurses and Midwives and similar committees will be set up for other groups of staff. There will also be a NHS Training Council which will work with the staff advisory committees on the training aspects of their work.

Rates of pay and conditions of service will continue to be settled through national machinery. The Review Body will continue to advise the Government on the remuneration of doctors and dentists.

Finance

The cost of the reorganized NHS will continue to be financed mainly from taxation and met from moneys voted by Parliament. The Department will make capital and revenue allocations to the RHAs and from these the RHAs will meet the cost of their own services and will, in turn, allocate money to AHAs to meet the cost of area services including the cost of Community Health Councils. Payments made to general medical and dental practitioners etc., under the terms of their contracts will be separately funded by the Department.

The allocations of available funds to health authorities will be designed progressively to reduce the disparities between the resources available to different regions, and to achieve standards and improvements in services with due regard to national, regional and area priorities.

With the transfer of services local authorities have been relieved of expenditure and this will be taken into account when assessing the level of grant to be paid by the Central Government to local authorities.

Under the former NHS the hospital authorities were trustees of substantial sums given to them by the public. The trusts have been transferred to the new authorities and care taken to ensure that both the local administration and the purposes of these gifts are preserved as far as it is possible to do so.

The funds formerly held by Hospital Management Committees have been transferred to the appropriate AHA. The future administration of the funds which were held by Boards of Governors or by University HMCs have been transferred in most cases to Special Trustees.

The new authorities have powers to accept fresh gifts to help them in any part of their work. Financial help from voluntary sources has always played an important part in the NHS and this will continue.

In March 1976 the Government put forward for discussion its priorities for spending in the Health Service and social services in the next four years. The guidelines — the first ever issued for the NHS — were contained in a consultative document, "Priorities for Health and Personal Social Services in England".

Despite the standstill in public expenditure, there was to be limited growth in the health and social services. Priority was suggested for primary care, and services for the elderly and disabled, the mentally ill, mentally handicapped people, children and families. These groups were also to benefit from new arrangements — backed with special funds — for joint planning and financing by health and local authorities. But growth of general hospital services would have to be restricted and spending on maternity services rationalized to make room for these developments.

Mrs. Barbara Castle, when Secretary of State for Social Services, said in the foreword: "I have a duty to set national policy guidelines within which local needs can be assessed. This document seeks to turn planning into a co-operative enterprise': a process in which the guidelines from the centre are related to — and influenced by — the experience of those who have to apply them in local circumstances."

In a major new approach to planning, she has asked health and local authorities, Community Health Councils, voluntary organizations, representatives of the professions, staff and others to comment on her suggested priorities. Mrs. Castle said: "I shall be ready to modify these strategic plans in the light of their views. And within those guidelines I shall keep central intervention to the minimum."

The document said: "The level of resources which will be available over the next few years means that difficult choices will have to be made. It is essential that they should be made in full knowledge of the facts." And it concluded: "The development of a manageable order of priorities requires recognition on the part of the community that there are limits to what the social services can do to alleviate social need."

Complaints

For the investigation of complaints, each Health Authority should have arrangements which work well and which command the confidence of the public. Arrangements already existed in most Local Authorities; and in the former Executive Councils there were long established statutory procedures for investigating complaints against practitioners, which will continue under the Family Practitioner Committees. A review of hospital authorities' arrangements for handling complaints was undertaken by an independent Committee under the Chairmanship of Mr. Michael Davies, QC which reported in December 1973. It suggested that a national Code of Practice for dealing with suggestions and complaints about the hospital service should be established. The Report is being carefully studied and consultations are going on with interested bodies.

Apart from these channels, there is a Health Service Commissioner who will investigate complaints against NHS authorities. This is an important extension of the ombudsman principle in the public service. The Commissioner's jurisdiction covers the whole of the unified NHS. He will not, however, investigate complaints which, in his opinion, relate to the exercise of clinical judgement by doctors and other staff, nor will he deal with complaints for which statutory procedures already exist (eg. those about general medical and dental practitioners, pharmacists and opticians which will continue to be dealt with under the service committee procedure) or which he thinks the complainant could reasonably pursue through the courts.

The complainant will have direct access to the Commissioner who, however, will not investigate a complaint until he is satisfied that the health authority concerned has had a reasonable opportunity to investigate it and reply to the complainant who, despite this, is still dissatisfied. Complaints to the Commissioner will not have to be made by the patient himself although no doubt most of them will be. There will be some cases where the patient is unable to act for himself, and in such cases the complaint may be made on his behalf.

Voluntary Services

Voluntary bodies, which have always played an important part in the development of the health and welfare services, will be encouraged, in close co-operation with the area health and local authorities, to increase and extend their activities. Through their membership of the Community Health Councils they will be able to influence the way in which the health services are developed.

The recent growth in the number of organizers co-ordinating voluntary help in hospitals is expected to continue and at present research is being carried out into extending this method of co-ordination to the wider field of voluntary work in the community.

The RHAs and AHAs will be able to make grants in support of voluntary bodies which provide and promote local services. Financial help for national activities will continue to come from the central Department.

Arrangements for London

There are exceptional features in the health and related services in London. For instance, there are the already established pattern of local government boundaries and services, the way in which hospitals—including the very large number of teaching hospitals, both undergraduate and postgraduate—are distributed, and the fact that former Executive Councils administered family practitioner services over much wider areas than those of the individual London boroughs. It was therefore necessary to have certain special arrangements for the London area.

(a) There are four RHAs with territory outside as well as inside Greater London which, like such authorities elsewhere, include teaching areas.

(b) Because the Greater London area is divided administratively between 4 RHAs, consideration is being given to setting up an advisory Committee for the purpose of co-ordinating the planning and provision of services in London.

(c) AHAs have been formed out of single London boroughs or groups of boroughs. The local authority places on the AHA (which, in order to give each grouped borough appropriate representation, are more than outside London) are shared between the boroughs on an equitable basis.

(d) The health districts, each of which has a Community Health Council, have boundaries which do not always follow the borough boundaries within the health area.

(e) The Greater London Ambulance Service will continue to be administered as a single unit.

(f) In time, the 12 postgraduate teaching hospitals should become closely associated with other hospitals and health services in the vicinity, but for a transitional period the Secretary of State, after consultation with London University, has decided that each postgraduate teaching hospital's Board of Governors shall continue in being in the first instance for a period not exceeding five years and the Board will continue to be appointed as previously, except that RHAs are represented on Boards of Governors in place of RHBs.

The five Executive Councils which formerly covered Greater London and parts of the surrounding areas have been replaced by 16 Family Practitioner Committees. This is because in the integrated Service it will be necessary for AHAs and FPCs to correspond on a one-to-one basis in order to get the maximum benefit.

It should be emphasized that none of these special arrangements for London will prevent patients from crossing boundaries to their family doctor or to a hospital outside the health area in which they live. In London, as in the rest of the country, administrative boundaries will not be barriers to the movement of patients.

[P] For practical reasons no special allowance was specified in 1974–75.

HEALTH SERVICE COMMISSIONER

The offices of Health Service Commissioners for England, for Scotland and for Wales were set up with effect from 1 October 1973. The present holder of the three offices is Sir Idwal Pugh.

The Health Service Commissioners investigate complaints from members of the public that they have suffered injustice or hardship as a result of a failure in a service provided by one of the health authorities, or of their failure to provide a service which should have been provided, or of maladministration involved in other actions taken by health authorities. Before the Commissioners can investigate, the complaint must have been brought to the attention of the authority concerned and an adequate opportunity given to investigate it and reply. They do not deal with complaints for which statutory procedures for investigation already exist (e.g. those about general medical and dental practitioners, pharmacists and opticians) or with complaints against actions taken solely in the exercise of clinical judgement. They do not normally investigate complaints for which a person could seek a remedy in the courts but they have discretion to do so.

The Commissioners report annually, and as they think fit, to the respective Secretaries of State who lay the reports before each House of Parliament. The terms of reference of the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration have been expanded to cover these reports.

CENTRAL HEALTH SERVICES COUNCIL

The Central Health Services Council is constituted under Section 2(1) of the National Health Services Act 1946 as amended, to advise the Secretary of State for Social Services and the Secretary of State for Wales on general matters relating to the National Health Service in England and Wales as the Council thinks fit or as they may refer to it.

Chairman: Sir John Hanbury, CBE, MA, BPharm, FPS, FRIC.

Vice-Chairman: Sir Ronald Gibson, CBE, LLD, FRCS, FRCGP.

Secretary: P. J. Fletcher.

Address: Central Health Services Council, Department of Health and Social Security, Alexander Fleming Hse., Elephant and Castle, London, SE1 (Tel. 01-407 5522 ext. 6614).

THE HEALTH EDUCATION COUNCIL

The objects for which the Council is established are to promote and encourage in England, Wales and Northern Ireland education and research in the science and art of healthy living and the principles of hygiene and the teaching thereof, and to assist Government Departments, local authorities and other statutory and voluntary bodies in so far as their work comprises health education and propaganda directed to the promotion or safeguarding of public health or to the prevention and cure of disease, and to provide analogous services for bodies and for individuals overseas.

Chairman: Sir Harold Evans, Bt, CMG, OBE.

Director-General: A. C. L. Mackie, CBE, DFC.

Address: 78 New Oxford St., London, WC1A 1AH (01-637 1881).

LONDON

Undergraduate Teaching Hospitals are now governed by the respective Area Health Authority (Teaching).

Post-graduate Teaching Hospitals (except Hammersmith Hospital which is within the Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow AHA(T)) are still administered by Boards of Governors, viz:

SCOTLAND

The National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1972 provides for a reorganization on lines broadly similar to those subsequently approved for England and Wales.

The Act sets up 15 Health Boards, the areas of which follow closely the regional and district boundaries proposed for local government purposes.

Each Health Board is required to set up a local health council to represent the interests of the public and the Secretary of State is required to set up University Liaison Committees to advise Health Boards on clinical teaching and research.

A Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Services is to be constituted to carry out functions delegated to it by the Secretary of State. Such functions may include the purchase of equipment etc., the provision of professional services and the use of premises for local authorities and educational authorities.

Medical practitioners, nurses and auxiliaries employed by local authorities will be transferred to a Health Board or the Common Services Agency.

SEAPORT AND AIRPORT HEALTH AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Seaports

Statutory authority to constitute Port Health Authorities (styled before 1936 "Port Sanitary Authorities") by Order of the Local Government Board, and to invest them with appropriate powers, was first contained in Sections 287 to 290 of the Public Health Act 1875, with Section 291 of the Act itself constituting the Authority for London. These Statutory powers are now embodied in Sections 2 to 5 and 9 and 10 of the Public Health Act 1936, Sections 254 and 262 of the Local Government Act 1972 also apply and Sections 5 and 6 of the Public Health (London) Act 1936, and are administered by the Secretary of State for Social Services. The primary purpose in setting up Port Health Authorities was to prevent the import—and export—of infectious disease.

Port Health Authorities (outside London) are constituted from "riparian authorities"—i.e., those Local Authorities whose districts in any part abut on the "Customs ports" which have been established by Customs and Excise for revenue purposes and comprise the whole coastline and shores of navigable rivers. A Port Health Authority may be constituted from one riparian authority and be in effect a committee of the Authority (but having its own constitution and powers)—for example, as at Southampton—or from two or more riparian authorities to form a joint board, the authorities being represented on the board and contributing towards its expenditure—for example, as at the River Tyne. The Corporation of London are constituted the Port Health Authority for the London area.

The area of jurisdiction of a Port Health Authority is specified in the constituting Order and the land and seaward boundaries are usually coterminous with those of the Customs port. In practically all cases the area comprises only water, the inclusion of land being very exceptional, and it does not overlap the district of any riparian authority from which the Port Health Authority are constituted. The area of the London Port Health Authority extends from Teddington Lock but, exceptionally it includes land (e.g., the land within the dock gates). Under the City of London (Various Powers) Act 1965, the Seaward Boundaries for the London Port Health Authority are: imaginary straight lines drawn from latitude 51°37′00″ north, longitude 00°57′19″ east (Foulness Point in the county of Essex) to latitude 51°46′05″ north longitude 01°20′32″ east (Gunfleet Old Lighthouse) and thence to latitude 51°26′36″ north longitude 01°25′30″ east and thence to latitude 51°24′55″ north longitude 00°54′21″ east (Warden Point in the county of Kent).

A Port Health Authority may have assigned to them in the constituting order any of the powers, etc., of a Local Authority under the Public Health Acts, and they may exercise many of the powers in respect of ships within the area of jurisdiction (see Section 267 of the Public Health Act 1936). In practice, the powers, etc., assigned are restricted to those so exercisable, i.e. in the main, those in Parts III, V, VI and XII of the Act of 1936. The chief duties of a Port Health Authority arise, not only from these statutory provisions, but from the Public Health (Ships) Regulations 1970 as amended 1974 made by the Secretary of State for Social Services under Section 143 of the Public Health Act 1936 which inter alia contain provisions for implementing the Government's obligations under the International Health Regulations of the World Health Organization. A Port Health Authority may also have duties under other enactments—for example, in connection with imported food, destruction of rodents on coastwise ships, etc.

Port health inspectors are responsible, as authorized officers under the Imported Food Regulations 1968 as amended, for the examination of foods imported for human consumption and for the detention of any foods which appear to them to be unsound, unwholesome or unfit for human consumption. They also carry out various other health and hygiene controls, e.g., under the Food Hygiene (Docks, Carriers, etc.) Regulations 1960 and under general public health legislation.

A riparian authority whose district is not included in a port health district has the same functions under the Public Health (Ships) Regulations as a Port Health Authority.

From 1 April 1974 expenditure on port health services by local authorities (as defined in section 10 of the Local Government Act 1974) is relevant expenditure for Rate Support Grant purposes. Authorities which are not so defined as local authorities may precept neighbouring local authorities in order to meet their costs in carrying out port health functions.

Detailed information about Customs ports, port health districts and riparian districts is contained in the "Reports and Papers on the Port and Riparian Sanitary Survey of England and Wales, 1893–94", published by the Local Government Board (Command No. 7812–1895), and much of it, particularly that relating to the limits of ports, still holds good.

Airports

Section 15 of the Customs and Excise Act 1952 (which replaces a similar provision which appeared previously in Air Navigation Orders) in effect requires aircraft coming to the United Kingdom first to alight at a Customs airport. At such an airport there is the same need for health control as at a seaport, but the speed of air travel necessitates even greater vigilance. All the principal civilian airports in this country have been designated Customs airports, and, broadly, they may be divided into three categories: (a) "national airports"—i.e., airports vested in or under the control of the Department of Trade or the British Airports Authority (set up by the Airports Authority Act 1965); (b) municipal airports; and (c) privately owned airports.

NOTE: Airports at which Customs facilities are provided, or are available, for specified services at certain periods only, are not treated as Customs airports.

The powers, etc., for applying health control at airports are contained in regulations made by the Secretary of State for Social Services. Regulations on this subject were first made in 1938, under Section 143 of the Public Health Act 1936 (like the Public Health (Ships) Regulations). Subsequently, additional powers were given by the Civil Aviation Act 1946 (now contained in the Civil Aviation Act 1971) to apply the Regulations to "national airports" (which are Crown property) and the current regulations—the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations 1970 as amended 1974—were made under the Acts of 1936 and 1971.

The Authorities responsible for executing and enforcing the Regulations at airports (styled "responsible authorities") vary with the category of the airport.

(a) At "national airports", the Secretary of State for Social Services is primarily the "responsible authority" but he has power to delegate his functions to local authorities (including County Councils) or to the British Airports Authority at airports under its control. In every case the Secretary of State has delegated his functions to a local authority which then becomes the "responsible authority". The "responsible authority" at a "national airport" need not be the local authority for the district in which the airport is situated and, in practice, the delegation varies with circumstances of the particular airport.

(b) At a municipal airport, the maintaining local authority are usually the "responsible authority", notwithstanding that the airport may be outside their district.

(c) At a privately owned airport, the "responsible authority" are the local authority for the district in which the airport is situated.

A "responsible authority" as such, are concerned only with the application of the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations. Other matters, such as the enforcement of the Imported Food Regulations, sanitary services at the airport, etc., are the general concern of the local authority for a district; at a "national airport" vested in or under the control of the Department of Trade (Civil Aviation Dept.) (into which, being Crown property, the local authority have no right of entry) arrangements for these matters are made between the controlling Department and the local authority.

The general scope of the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations is similar to that of the Public Health (Ships) Regulations, the powers of the Airport Medical Officer being broadly the same; but additional precautions are embodied in their application as (unlike voyage by ships from the usual infected areas) the time taken to come from those areas by air can be less than the incubation period of the more dangerous infectious diseases.

The expenditure of "responsible authorities" in operating the health control at "national airports" is wholly reimbursed by the Exchequer.

Certain Royal Air Force airfields and Royal Naval Air stations have been designated Customs airports for the first landing of Service aircraft entering the United Kingdom. The Service medical authorities apply health control to any aircraft (Service or civilian) alighting at one of these airports. The control is, broadly, on the same lines as that operated at civilian airports. The commander of a Service aircraft landing at a civilian airport is expected to comply and to ensure compliance with the civilian control.

Review by M. CAMPBELL LEE, FIHM
Director of Housing, City of Nottingham

I believe that in the Housing Management Review last year I referred to a time rife with gloom and despondency on the housing scene. It certainly was a crisis year for housing—as the press was all too ready to point out. A columnist in one of the leading national newspapers went so far as to describe the housing crisis as "Britain's permanent crisis: our constant everyday ever present never solved crisis problem scandal". It is fitting therefore, that 1975/6 may be looked upon as a year of serious consideration of issues and alternative approaches in housing. If one had conducted a survey in order to ask people what they considered to be the main housing issues of the day, I feel sure that the answers would have included such things as insufficient supply of dwellings, tenant dissatisfaction, mortgages, vandalism, rent arrears, maintenance, slum clearance and rehabilitation. I feel that the major issue can be summed up by the words 'finance, flexibility and discretion'.

I feel very strongly that there is a need for stability in housing finance. It cannot aid the long term goal of achieving adequate housing for the whole community if there are frequent changes in housing finance. Authorities should be able to plan for the future, confident in the knowledge that the system will not be changed in midstream and that their planned expenditure will not be curtailed. The establishment of a stable framework of housing finance based on the widest possible consensus has been a matter of undue political controversy in the past and it is felt that substantial advantage would accrue from a nationally agreed policy for housing finance. The financing of the Social Services has not, to anything like the same extent, been subject to harmful changes in direction and there is no reason why a consensus should not be sought in this sphere of housing.

To give two examples of financial controls unduly restricting local housing practice—the housing cost yardstick. Firstly the cost controls imposed have, in many instances, had the unfortunate effect of dictating the type of house built by local authorities irrespective of local need and of ruling out the use of small sites. I would like to see the yardstick abolished as an instrument of cost control. Secondly the current use of Section 105 of the Housing Act 1974 to pre-empt the discretion of local authorities as to their priorities for the improvement of council owned dwellings.

Existing financial arrangements for housing by which it appears more and more resources are being expended to produce less and less satisfactory results is of concern to all housing authorities and for this reason I welcomed the decision of the Secretary of State for the Environment, Mr. Crosland, to set up a review of housing finance in 1975. If the outcome of this review results in the setting up and implementation of a new system for housing finance then it will be I feel one of the most daunting challenges in the housing field.

A radical re-think about the framework within which our housing policies are formulated is essential if the many-sided challenge of the future is to be met. We are still trying to solve a multiplicity of differing housing problems by national policies. This is both inappropriate and wasteful. Local housing authorities have loosely defined responsibilities in relation to meeting the needs of their areas but in practice concentrate most of their resources on those fields of activity where Exchequer grants are largest and by doing so they are simply implementing housing policies emanating from central Government rather than devising policies which are appropriate to the needs of their areas. Because of this master and servant relationship there is not only a lack of incentive for housing authorities to devise comprehensive policies appropriate to their areas, but they are, in fact, inhibited from doing so.

Local authorities should have more discretion in relation to housing. On the re-organization of local government, housing responsibilities were rightly placed with district councils. This was in recognition of district councils' responsibility for the local physical environment, the need for a democratic locally responsible housing management and the varying needs and conditions of different localities. In order that democratic local government may continue to be responsive to changing local needs and circumstances, it is of fundamental importance that it has a large measure of discretion over the number, type, standard and location of housing provided. It is of the utmost importance that any proposals resulting from a long-term review should be such as to allow local authorities adequate flexibility and discretion.

If local authorities and their electorate were left to decide whether to concentrate on new building, improvement work or maintaining low rents, then whilst central government would be less involved in the local political scene it could exercise a great strategic control in relation to the determination of total Exchequer funds to housing and their distribution between authorities.

Central government could well work much more effectively if a system were to be devised whereby financial resources would be channelled in areas most in need of them. There is a danger at present of over stimulation of production and raising of standards and expectations in areas of low housing need, thus consuming resources which ought to be directed to areas of high housing need.

In suggesting that local authorities and their electorate should be left to get on with the job I would like to echo the words of Lord Goodman as he addressed the Association of District Councils in 1975:

"Housing is such a vital necessity that it should be above party politics and the vagaries of the economy. The continuation of stop-go policies over it was a piece of administrative and political madness. The need for housing should be catered for regardless of changes in the economy. Provision of housing is such a pre-necessity that it should transcend all political consideration and should be a major and basic feature of everyone's political programme. No one should be able to say that they have a better housing programme than their political opponents."

The success of any housing policy ultimately depends on the staff who operate it; on those who administer the housing service locally and nationally, and those who explain complicated housing provisions and processes to the people whose lives are most affected and often fundamentally changed by them. Housing management is today a professional activity of the greatest social importance.

For the past two years I have commented in the Housing Management Review of concern over the quality and quantity of trained staff and of the need to strive constantly to produce improved training facilities for housing staff. There is still a shortage of trained and qualified housing managers. Each year at the Institute of Housing Conference a Minister pays tribute to the work of the housing profession, but that was as far as it went. I was delighted, therefore, to see that Mr. Anthony Crosland, in replying to a Parliamentary question, stated: "One of the major problems facing housing authorities and housing associations is the scarcity of qualified professional staff . . . It is my intention to consider what positive help the Department can give in order to remedy this and to increase the opportunities for training and education for housing management. A fresh initiative on this front must embrace not only those who will reach the highest positions in the housing service, but all who work in it at whatever level". Another important step forward, but in my view a long overdue one, was the announcement in August 1975 of the intention to appoint a Housing Management Adviser to the Department of the Environment and consideration of proposals for the setting up of a small Housing Management Advisory Group.

The main functions of the Adviser and the Advisory Group are to identify and foster the application of good professional practice in the field of housing management, to promote the exchange of ideas and the spread of information, to advise the Department on the practical implications of existing housing policies and to assist in the formulation of new policies.

The arrival of the Adviser is seen as the beginning of a new initiative both in central and local government to promote good housing management in its broadest sense. The need for information about good practices to be gathered together and passed on, and for a better understanding to be fostered in the Department of the Environment of the housing manager's problems and the effect of central government policies on his activities and objectives has been realised.

I referred earlier to 1975/6 being a year of consideration and of alternative approaches. The main themes in alternative approaches have been in the form of housing associations, tenant co-operatives and reductions in housing standards.

Housing associations are particularly suited to help in meeting the housing needs of a wide range of people who for one reason or another find it difficult or impossible to find suitable private rented accommodation, cannot afford to buy their own home and are not eligible for a local authority house. Under the direction of their new father figure (The Housing Corporation) housing associations have concentrated more on those who are "left out" in this way. The Corporation guidance to housing associations on tenant selection emphasises the importance of recognising and responding positively to the needs of such groups as the homeless, the elderly, the physically handicapped, single people, single parent families, both by sensitive tenant selection policies and by the provision of specially designed housing for those who need it.

With the impetus for rehabilitation being provided by the 1974 Housing Act, housing associations have a great deal of scope in helping towards the relief of the main housing stress areas.

There have been many doubts raised as to whether housing co-operatives and greater tenant control could make a significant contribution in the present complex housing scene. Concern was expressed that allocation policies would not help those in greatest need, that because all kinds of people were housed on all kinds of estates, difficulties would arise over management and maintenance that not all tenants are decision makers and minority groups might easily take over and that large public funds were involved. If practical housing policies are to emerge from all this theory of tenant involvement and control, much more research and experiment must be tried out on the ground. Let us not forget that there are as many prejudices, disagreements and intolerant attitudes among tenants as are attributed to local authority members and staff and if involvement is to be of real and lasting value and lead to the passing of control of housing and its environment to the users, it should evolve gradually as a result of trial and error and a build up of experience.

With regard to the question of lowering standards, whilst we certainly need more basic housing, the long term social and environmental problems of sacrificing quality for quantity must be carefully considered. One difficulty is that there is no permanent and objective definition of housing need. Standards and expectations rise over time; what one generation sees as a luxury, the next generation sees as a necessity. We are, therefore, chasing a moving target. Building to higher standards now will mean higher costs, but will be so much cheaper than remedying obsolescence in later years as some authorities who face problems of standards in comparatively young houses are now finding.

We should not be taking panic measures to reduce standards because of the economic crisis. Instead we should be maximising our resources, to maintain and improve standards.

There is a definite requirement to consider the varying needs of all sections of society and seriously to consider and explore the possibilities of alternative approaches. Any acceptance of alternative approaches in housing, in finance, design, tenure and social commitment involves a re assessment of priorities especially at a time of financial stringency, unemployment and industrial set-back. If alternative approaches are seen as development in response to changing standards, increasing sensitivity and greater social awareness, then experiment in new form should be carried out in a spirit of co operation and not confrontation. There are many things wrong with our society which I should like to see changed, but change should be brought about by an evolutionary, constitutional process in contrast to a revolutionary process. In relative terms we still have one of the most privileged societies in the world—let's keep it that way.

THE HOUSING CORPORATION

Sloane Square Hse., London, SW1W 8NT (01-730 9991)
Chairman: The Lord Goodman, CH.
Chief Executive: J. R. Madge, CB.

The Housing Corporation was set up under Part I of the Housing Act 1964. It is a body corporate with perpetual succession and a common seal. The members of the Corporation, of whom there shall be not more than fifteen, are appointed by the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales acting jointly. The Corporation presents to the Secretaries of State an annual report and audited accounts, and these are laid before Parliament.

Under the Housing Act 1964 the Corporation was charged with the duty to promote and assist the development of housing societies building for letting at non-profit cost rents or on a co-ownership basis.

£100m was made available to the Corporation from the National Loans Fund for onward lending to societies to finance the development schemes.

Under Section 77 of the Housing Finance Act 1972 the Corporation was given the additional duty to assist housing associations (as defined in the Housing Act 1957) building for letting at "fair rents" and was enabled to borrow more money from the National Loans Fund for the purpose.

The Corporation was given greatly extended powers under the Housing Act 1974, so that its general duty now is to promote the development and effectiveness of the voluntary housing movement as a whole. Housing associations, providing subsidized rented accommodation either by new building or by acquisition, improvement and conversion, or providing hostels or unsubsidized co-ownership homes, must be formally registered with the Corporation before they are eligible to apply for loan finance and various forms of financial assistance from local authorities, or from the Corporation itself, under Parts I to III of the Act.

The borrowing limit from the National Loans Fund has been increased and, with the consent of the Secretaries of State, the Corporation may now borrow from other sources.

The Treasury may guarantee the repayment of such borrowing subject to conditions laid down. It may, with the consent of the Secretary of State, subscribe for or acquire any securities of a body corporate and promote any such body.

The Corporation's powers to acquire and develop land have been widened and it may exercise compulsory purchase powers in certain circumstances. It has wide powers of control over associations which are formally registered under Section 13 of the Act, and control over dispositions by associations by way of sale, lease, mortgage, charge or otherwise under Section 2.

NORTHERN IRELAND HOUSING EXECUTIVE

1 College Square East, Belfast, BT1 6BQ (Belfast 44388)

The Housing Executive has all the powers and duties of the local authorities and the Housing Trust under previous Housing Acts plus additional powers and duties conferred by the 1971 Housing Executive Act. Its general functions as set out in the Act are: to regularly examine housing conditions and requirements carrying out such inspections and surveys as it considers necessary; to draw up a programme for the provision of its own accommodation, the closure, demolition and clearance of unfit houses, the improvement and conversion of houses, and for the encouragement of the provision of new houses and improvements by others; and to establish housing information and housing advisory services.

The Housing Executive has the power to build houses for sale, and to sell its existing properties. And it can advance money by way of mortgage to any person for the purposes of acquiring or constructing a house, converting a building into a house or acquiring buildings for that purpose, and for altering, enlarging, repairing or improving a house.

The members of the Housing Executive are:

J. O'Hara, LLB (Chairman); R. E. M. Humphreys, JP, MIRTE (Vice-Chairman); C. E. B. Brett, MA; W. H. R. Nicholl, JP; Col. A. N. Clarke, OBE, BA, JP; T. Seymour; Mrs. A. Bashford; J. J. Donnelly; P. McKenna.

LICENSING AND REGISTRATION

C—County Councils, D—District Councils, LB—London Boroughs, GLC—Greater London Council.

Local authorities have a wide range of duties for the protection of the public, as the following enactments show. Other responsibilities designed for the protection of the public include: licensing of persons and premises, registration of persons and premises, inspection of premises and enforcement of the laws. To list some of them is to indicate their scope.

The authorities empowered to license, register, inspect and enforce vary from Act to Act. County Councils and County Borough Councils have, in the past, had the most powers. Some Acts permit the designated authority to delegate its powers either to other authorities or to Petty Sessional Courts or Standing Joint Committees. Following reorganization many of the licensing duties are reallocated to District Councils.

The following is a list of Subjects, Governing Acts, and Powers and Duties.

Betting and Lotteries Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963. Licensing of tracks for betting. D, GLC. Registration of promoters of pool betting and charitable lotteries. D, LB.

Charities Charities Act 1960. Power to maintain public indexes of local charities, to review the working of groups of local charities. C, D, LB. To appoint trustees of certain local charities, C, D. To contribute to the expenses of the Commissioners and other powers set out in SS. 6, 9 to 12, 21, 32 and 37 of the Act. C, D, LB.

Charities for Disabled Persons National Assistance Act 1948. Registration. Non Metro C, Metro D, LB.

‡Cinemas Cinematograph Acts 1909 and 1952, Sunday Entertainments Act 1932. Licensing of premises for cinematograph exhibitions and permitting them to be opened and used on Sundays for that purpose. D, GLC.

Camping Sites—see Movable Dwellings

Celluloid and cinematograph film The Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act 1922. Registration of Stores, C, LB.

Day Nurseries Nurseries and Child-Minders Regulation Act 1948. Registration of premises or persons. Non Metro C, Metro D, LB.

Driving Licences Road Traffic Act 1972. Licensing of persons. Agency for Department of Environment—see also Motor Vehicles.

Explosives Explosives Acts 1875 and 1923, Local Government Act 1888. Registration of premises and licensing of Stores. C, LB.

Gaming The Gaming Act, 1968. Licensing of premises where gaming is carried on. D, LB.

Homes for Aged and Disabled Persons National Assistance Act 1948. Registration of persons. Non Metro C, Metro D, LB.

House to House Collections and Street Collections House to House Collections Act 1939. Licensing of organizations—charities. D, London Metropolitan Police Authority.

Local Taxation Licences: Dogs, Game Dealers, Game Keepers, Kill Game Various Acts. Licensing of persons. D, LB.

Marine Store Dealers Scrap Metal Dealers Act 1964. Registration of persons and premies. D, LB.

Massage and special treatment Various local Acts. Licensing of persons and premises.

Moneylenders Moneylenders Act 1927, Finance Act 1949. Licensing of persons and premises. D, LB—Repealed from a date to be appointed by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and transferred to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Motor Vehicles Vehicles (Excise) Act 1971. Licensing of vehicles (Agency for Department of Environment, probably until 1975 when the agency arrangements will cease).

Movable Dwellings Public Health Act 1936. (i) Licensing persons to allow land to be used as sites; (ii) Licensing persons to erect or station dwellings. D, LB.

Movement of Animals Diseases of Animals Act 1950. Licensing of movement. C, LB.

Music or Music and dancing Disorderly Houses Act 1751, Local Government Act 1888, Public Health Acts Amendment Act 1890, Home Counties (Music and Dancing) Licensing Act 1926, Sunday Entertainment Act 1932, London Government Act 1963, Private Places of Entertainment (Licensing) Act 1967, and various local Acts. Licensing of premises for music and music and dancing and granting of licences in respect of musical entertainments on Sundays. D, GLC.

Nurses Agencies Nurses Agences Act 1957. Licensing of persons and premises. Non Metro C, Metro D, LB.

Pawnbrokers Pawnbrokers Act 1872, Finance Act 1949. Licensing of persons and premises. D, LB—Repealed from a date to be appointed by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and transferred to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Performing Animals Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925. Registration of trainers and exhibitors. C.

Petroleum spirit, petroleum mixture, carbide of calcium and liquid methane Petroleum (Regulation) Acts 1928 and 1936. Petroleum (Consolidation) Act 1928. Licensing of premises. C.

Poisons Pharmacy and Poisons Act 1933. Registration of sellers and premises. C.

Refreshment Houses Late Night Refreshment Houses Act, 1969. Licensing of persons and premises. D, LB.

Riding Establishments Riding Establishments Acts 1964 and 1970. Licensing of persons and premises. D, LB.

Servants' Registries Public Health Acts Amendment Act 1907. Registration of persons and premises. D, LB—Repealed from a date to be appointed by the Employment Protection Act 1973 and transferred to the Secretary of State.

Slaughterhouses Slaughterhouses Act 1958, Food and Drugs Act 1955. Licensing of premises and persons. D, LB.

Street Collections Police, Factories etc. (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1916. Licensing of organizations—charities. D, London Metropolitan Police Authority.

Theatres The Theatres Act, 1968. Licensing of premises for state plays, D, GLC.

Theatrical Employers Theatrical Employers Registration Acts 1925 and 1928. Registration. D, LB.

War Charities War Charities Act 1940. Registration. Non Metro C, Metro D, LB.

‡ For Sundays, the Act uses the term "permission" and the document issued is not a licence but a "permit".

Local Education Authorities licence children for employment in entertainment and the Secretary of State has power to make regulations by statutory instrument governing the employment of children and young persons.

The list above though comprising many of the varied responsibilities of local authorities is by no means comprehensive. For example, mention has not been made of the provision in the Shops Act 1950, permitting Jewish Traders to open on Sundays if registered for that purpose; neither have the special powers granted to many authorities in private Acts.

The ways and means by which Councils carry out their functions are many. Some large authorities concentrate the bulk of the work in a separate department under an independent Chief Officer, as a study of the Principal Officers in the Main Directory will show. They name it the Public Control Department and it is an apt title. (Other authorities distribute the tasks among various departments and a variety of staff.) It is probably accurate to say that, exclusive of the licensing work, a proportion of these diverse duties falls on the shoulders of the Inspectors of Weights and Measures and that Public Health Inspectors get their fair share of the burden in many areas.

In London the following matters are dealt with by the Greater London Council: V.(E.) Act, 1971 R.T. Acts, 1972 and 1974.

Licensing of motor vehicles (Vehicle (Excise) Act 1972), Road Traffic Act.

NB. The Greater London Council will deal with those matters which are still the responsibility of Local Authorities acting as agents for the Department of the Environment during the transition to Centralized Computer records of all Vehicle Licences. This is due to be completed by early 1978. Please refer to your local licensing office for details of the current position.

Licensing of the keeping of petroleum spirit, etc. (Petroleum (Regulation) Acts 1928 and 1936).

Licensing of places of entertainment:

Public music and dancing and boxing and wrestling licences under Schedule 12 of the London Government Act 1963;

Licences for private music and dancing promoted for private gain, under the Private Places of Entertainment (Licensing) Act 1967, for all areas in Greater London, except Enfield;

Cinematograph licences under the Cinematograph Acts 1909 and 1952;

Licences for the public performance of plays under the Theatres Act 1968;

Licensing of tracks for betting under Schedule 3 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963.

Issue of safety certificates for designated stadiums under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975.

DRIVER AND VEHICLE LICENSING

The Secretary of State for the Environment took over legal responsibility for the licensing of drivers and the registration and licensing of vehicles on 1 April 1971.

DRIVER LICENSING

In March 1973 the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre (DVLC) at Swansea started issuing driving licences direct to the public and by November 1976 the residual driver licensing functions of the Local Authority Local Taxation Offices acting as Agents of the Secretary of State will have ceased. The legal framework for driver licensing is contained in the Road Traffic Act 1972 which consolidated earlier enactments including the Vehicle and Driving Licences Act 1969 which paved the way for centralization. The 1972 Act has been amended by the Road Traffic Act 1974 which provides, among other things, for the full driving licences to be valid normally until the holder's 70th birthday and for revised arrangements for the assessment of applicants' and licence holders' medical fitness to drive. Provisional driving licences continue to be valid for one year.

VEHICLE REGISTRATION AND LICENSING

Responsibility for registering and licensing vehicles (whether new or otherwise) brought on to the road on or after 1 October 1974 was transferred from Local Taxation Offices to the new Local Vehicle Licensing Offices (LVLO). There are 81 of these Offices which register such vehicles and issue their vehicle licence. Details of each registration are forwarded by the LVLO to DVLC. The transfer of the records of existing vehicles to the centralized system began in April 1975 and is expected to be completed by about 1978. Once a vehicle's record is held at DVLC, subsequent licence renewals may be made either by post to DVLC or over the counter at the LVLO or post office.

Review by S. R. GEE, MInstMO
Hon. Secretary, Institute of Market Officers

Two years have now passed since Local Government Reorganization took place and it is beginning to be possible to assess its shortcomings and successes. Markets Departments (and this includes pleasure fairs, public abattoirs and cold stores in addition to retail and wholesale markets) were severely affected by the reorganization because, in the majority of cases, they were included as a minor section within a larger department. This linking with other departments does not form a regular pattern as in some cases Markets are combined with Clerk's or Treasurer's; in others with Estates, Valuation, Technical Services, Environmental Health or even Leisure Services. Due to this multiplicity of structures the degree of authority delegated to chief markets officers varies considerably. It would appear to be necessary for a proper career structure to be established for market officers in order to attract and encourage officers to this section of local government. One of the shortcomings of local government reorganization as far as the administration of markets is concerned must surely be the lack of contact, perhaps even understanding, between the officer in overall charge of the markets and the stallholders.

One of the most important pieces of legislation of modern times was introduced in December 1975, namely the Sex Discrimination Act 1975. This Act, which affects markets departments like everyone else, is essentially an Act about equality of opportunity, giving certain rights to women which can be enforced through the courts. It requires employers not to discriminate between men and women when recruiting staff or in the way they treat their employees. The Equal Pay Act is an extension of the same theme as it requires an employer to give equal treatment in respect of pay and other terms of their contract of employment to men and women doing the same or broadly similar work or work which has been given an equal value under job evaluation.

The Employment Protection Act 1975, which received the Royal Assent on 12th November 1975, is a wide ranging Act which is designed to improve industrial relations by the development of collective bargaining and giving employees a greater say in decisions affecting their working lives and greater job security. Certain provisions became effective on 1st January, 1st February and 1st March but the Act is not expected to be fully implemented until April 1977.

The Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 is now in full operation with workers and employees combining to improve safety standards in their working environment.

No further progress has been made regarding legislation affecting the operation of Sunday Markets. Numerous prosecutions have been made and continue to be made against persons organizing and taking part in Sunday Markets. However in some parts of the country they still persist apparently without challenge. The National Market Traders' Federation at their conference in Bournemouth on 10th May 1975 decided to oppose Sunday Markets. The National Association of British Market Authorities and the Institute of Market Officers are both strongly against any attempt to legalize Sunday Markets. It is interesting to note that the House of Lords has recently approved in principle an increase from 18 to 26 in the number of Sundays during which shops in holiday resorts may be open each year. This Private Member's Bill, the Shops (Holiday Resorts—Sunday Trading) Bill was sponsored by the Baroness Phillips.

Markets continue to be popular for shoppers of all ages and it is pleasing to report that Hucknall Market, now under the control of Ashfield District Council, and Widnes Market, controlled by Halton District Council, both held their centenary celebrations in 1976.

Several new markets have been opened throughout the country particularly in the Greater Manchester area. The importance of markets was stressed by the Greater Manchester Council in a series of studies carried out in preparing a county-wide structure plan. In March 1976 the third new market in Manchester's market expansion programme was opened at Wythenshawe two months ahead of schedule. This scheme, which cost £237,000, includes a food hall which houses 28 stalls open $5\frac{1}{2}$ days per week. The bulk of the market of 136 stalls is outside and is open 3 days per week. The fourth new market was opened at the beginning of May and forms part of the £3 million shopping and sports complex at Moss Side. This covered market contains 66 stalls and 8 shops. Markets are also planned for Harphurhey, Gorton, the Arndale Centre within the city itself and possibly at Newton Heath.

One of the larger undertakings which commenced operation in Februaty 1976 was Birmingham's new wholesale fruit and vegetable market. This is the second stage in the redevelopment of Birmingham's wholesale market, as the meat, fish and poultry sections were opened 12 months ago. Also in February H.M. The Queen officially opened the new £45 million National Exhibition Centre in Birmingham.

A new £300,000 Market Hall was opened at Coalville, Leicestershire in October 1975 by the North Leicester District Council and it contains 22 Food stall units and 85 general purpose stalls. In Lancashire the modernization of Lancaster City Market is almost complete and the St Helens Tontine development was opened in January 1976. This project contains 86 stall units on two floors. In Oldham the £200,000 temporary market hall built to replace the Victoria market hall destroyed by fire in October 1974 came into operation in March 1975, having been completed in only 11 weeks. Birkenhead's temporary market was opened in August 1975 but its new shopping precinct is now estimated to cost £16 million and is causing some anxiety to local market traders. Leicester's new ultra-modern market hall was officially opened in December 1975. This hall is built on a split level on a sloping site and includes a moving walkway. The new Eagle Centre in Derby was also opened in December and includes a covered market built to replace the Morledge market.

Proof of the popularity of markets is evidenced by the fact that over 900 applications have been received for the 200-stall market being built in the new Arndale Centre in Manchester. Future market development costing £2¼ million is planned to take place in Worksop, Nottinghamshire. During their tour of South Yorkshire on 26th July 1975, H.M. The Queen accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh visited Barnsley's markets and showed great interest in the various stalls and stallholders.

Damage amounting to £500,000 was caused by fire to Altrincham's 96 year old Market Hall in July 1975 but fortunately the outdoor market was not affected. Two thirds of the four and a half acre 70-year-old Kirkgate Market in the centre of Leeds was completely burnt out on 13th December 1975 shortly after the market had closed. About £7 million worth of damage and loss of stocks was caused because owing to Christmas trade stocks were much higher than normal. About 100 traders were able to re-open on the following Tuesday and temporary arrangements were made to re-house as many traders as possible and this was achieved within a few days. Prince Charles, who was in Leeds on an official visit 10 days after the fire, interrupted his schedule to inspect the fire damage and expressed his delight at the determination to get the market re-established.

The 27th Annual General Meeting and Conference of the National Association of British Market Authorities was held in Bournemouth in September 1975 when Mr. T. G. Morris, Environmental Health Services Officer for Gloucester, was installed as President for the forthcoming year. Mr. C. G. Melville-Smith of Gloucester, former Secretary, became Treasurer, the former Treasurer, Mr. J. H. Bailey, previously Nottingham Clerk of the Markets becoming Secretary.

At the 76th Annual Conference of the National Market Traders' Federation, also held at Bournemouth, the conference called for a campaign for the re-instatement of some statutory control over market rents and charges. It was stated that whilst there had been rent freezes there had been no restriction on service charges, which were included in rents. Mr. H. Cross was elected to continue as President with Mrs. Flo. Gaunt of Sheffield as Senior Vice-President.

In June 1975 the 32nd Annual General Meeting of the Institute of Market Officers was held in Derby when Mr. W. J. Shaw of Derby was elected President for the ensuing year and Mr. C. G. M. Mitchell of Liverpool was nominated as President-Elect. The retiring President, Mr. J. S. Ellis of Sheffield, stated that the Institute had a full role to play as an informed pressure group able to give professional advice to various government bodies in all aspects of markets and abattoir administration. A very interesting address on "Consumer Protection" was given by Mr. S. Gascoigne, Chief Inspector of the Consumer Protection Department for South Yorkshire County Council. The Institute's fifth Residential Course held in Sheffield was again fully booked and a new departure this year has been a series of meetings held at monthly intervals especially for students.

Markets continue to play an important part in community shopping and should not be isolated on out-of-town sites but be incorporated in a comparative environment within existing or developing shopping centres. They provide a valuable source of income to local authorities as well as an important service to the public—not only as popular shopping centres but also to provide the essential links in the distribution of foodstuffs through the wholesale and livestock markets.

COUNTRYSIDE COMMISSION

John Dower Hse., Crescent Pl., Cheltenham, GL50 3RA (Cheltenham (0242) 21381).

The Countryside Commission was set up under the Countryside Act 1968, and exercises powers under that Act and under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949. It has a wide range of advisory and executive functions relating to the conservation, and to the provision and improvement of facilities for enjoyment, of the countryside of England and Wales. Members are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales to whom the Commission report annually.

The Commission are entrusted with the task of designating national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty. There are ten national parks the Peak District, Lake District, Snowdonia, Dartmoor, Pembrokeshire Coast, North York Moors, Yorkshire Dales, Exmoor, Northumberland, and Brecon Beacons. The addresses of the administering authorities and of the National Park Officers are given under "National Parks" later in this section.

The Commission have powers under Section 9 of the Local Government Act 1974 to make grants for country parks, picnic sites and other countryside facilities and services. They promote the creation of long distance footpaths and bridleways, e.g. the Pennine Way, Cleveland Way; advise ministers and local planning authorities about the effect of any proposed development likely to be prejudicial to the natural beauty or amenity of the countryside, and provide interpretive services for the public.

Chairman: John Cripps, CBE.
Deputy Chairman: Robin Herbert.
Other Members: Prof. Graham Ashworth; Timothy Colman, DL, JP; Mrs. Elizabeth M. C. Foulkes; John Cousins; John Disley; Richard Hoyle, CBE; Brian Hubbard; James Kegie, OBE; Bernard Langton, CBE; The Hon. Trevor O. Lewis; Mrs. Joan V. Lipson; Prof. Oliver R. McGregor; Mrs. Judith Riley.
Director: R. J. S. Hookway.

COMMITTEE FOR WALES

Chairman: The Hon. Trevor O. Lewis.
Principal Officer: J. N. G. Davies.

COUNTRYSIDE COMMISSION FOR SCOTLAND

Battleby, Redgorton, Perth, PH1 3EW (P. 27921).

The Countryside Commission for Scotland was set up in April 1968 under the provisions of the Countryside (Scotland) Act 1967. It has executive and advisory functions relating to the provision, development and improvement of facilities for the enjoyment of the Scottish countryside and for the conservation and enhancement of its natural beauty. Members are appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland to whom the Commission report annually. The Report is laid before Parliament.

The Commission make recommendations to the Secretary of State for Scotland on grant aiding proposals, by local authorities, for the provision of countryside facilities and advise the Secretary of State for Scotland and local authorities in relation to any matter under the Planning Acts affecting land in the countryside. There are no national parks in Scotland.

Chairman: Mrs. E. J. Balfour.
Vice-Chairman: A. B. Campbell, OBE.
Other Members: Bailie Mrs. M. Barclay, OBE; Coun. Mrs. F. Ballantyne; The Marquess of Bute; Dr. W. J. Eggeling, CBE; Prof. P. G. Jarvis; D. N. Lowe, OBE; J. R. Maxwell Macdonald; W. H. Murray, OBE; B. K. Parnell; D. Ross.

Assistant Director (Planning): J. R. Turner.
Assistant Director (Research and Development): J. M. Fladmark.
Secretary: W. B. Prior.

NATIONAL PARKS

As provided in Local Government Act 1972, the administration of National Parks from 1 April 1974 became the responsibility of new National Park Committees or, in the case of the Lake District and the Peak District National Parks, a new special or joint planning board. It is the duty of the county council to establish the new committee for each National Park. For a Park comprised in two or more counties (a multi-county park) the committee is to be established by one of the councils by agreement, or in the absence of such agreement jointly by the councils concerned. The planning boards are constituted by orders made by the Secretary of State for the Environment under Section 1 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. In all cases, with the approval of the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Countryside Commission, the new Park authority may be given responsibilities in respect of land outside the area of the National Park. A third of the members of these park authorities are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales, as appropriate, on the recommendation of the Countryside Commission: their staffs are headed by a National Park Officer. It is the responsibility of these authorities to conserve and enhance the natural beauty and amenity of the parks and to promote their enjoyment by the public. Special supplementary block grants are paid in accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act 1974 towards the total costs of administering the parks for the national benefit.

National Parks are not publicly owned and designation confers on the public no right of access; in fact, much of the land, farmland, for instance, is in private ownership, as elsewhere. Rights of access in National Parks are the same as in other parts of the countryside and any additional access facilities have to be specially negotiated by agreement with the landowner or, failing agreement, by an access order. The ten National Parks, listed below, extend over 5,258 square miles, about 9 per cent of the total area of England and Wales. There are warden services and information centres in the Parks to help visitors. The Countryside Commission issue a free booklet about the Parks which lists the information centres.

The following notes about the Parks include the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the Park authorities and of the National Park Officers.

Treasurer: A. A. W. Moss.

Valuer and Estates Surveyor: Franklin A. Rice, FRICS, FRVA.

Architect: John M. V. Bishop, DA(Edin), ARIBA, MRTPI.

The Authority was set up on 1st January 1967, under the Lee Valley Regional Park Act 1966. It is a body composed of representatives appointed from their membership by the Greater London Council, the Hertfordshire and Essex County Councils and 9 London Boroughs and District Councils. This project is the first practical example of a "green wedge" policy as opposed to a green belt policy, bringing the countryside into areas of dense population.

The duty of the Authority is to develop the Park area of about 10,000 acres in the Lee Valley for recreation, sport, entertainment and the enjoyment of leisure. The project is financed by precept on the Greater London Council and the Hertfordshire and Essex County Councils.

COUNTRYSIDE RECREATION RESEARCH ADVISORY GROUP

Several government agencies have powers to undertake research into aspects of countryside recreation in England, Scotland and Wales. In order to ensure that these powers are used as effectively as possible, the agencies concerned agreed in January 1968 to establish the Countryside Recreation Research Advisory Group (CRRAG). Subsequent legislation made appropriate the widening of membership of CRRAG to fifteen bodies.

CRRAG keeps in touch with other official and semi-official organizations concerned with countryside recreation through corresponding membership. Corresponding members receive papers and can attend meetings of particular interest to them.

CRRAG's aims are:

(i) to harmonize the research efforts of member agencies;
(ii) to promote countryside recreation research;
(iii) to provide information for public and private agencies on countryside recreation research studies and techniques.

Association of County Councils, Association of District Councils, Association of Metropolitan Authorities, British Tourist Authority, British Waterways Board, Countryside Commission for Scotland, English Tourist Board, Forestry Commission, Natural Environment Research Council, Nature Conservancy Council, Scottish Tourist Board, Sports Council, Wales Tourist Board, Water Space Amenity Commission and the Countryside Commission (servicing the Group).

"Let's decide this by a show of Handbooks"

When the Councillor's Handbook was first published in 1960 it was intended for the councillor new to local government. Before long however it was generally accepted as essential for all councillors new or experienced.

The current edition written by Professor J.D. Stewart, Associate Director of the Institute of Local Government Studies, University of Birmingham and John. K. Boynton, Chief Executive of Cheshire County Council is in constant demand.

Men and women seek election to local authorities for many different reasons. Some have political ambitions; some bring to bear business ability and professional skill; some are anxious to help the communities in which they live. Whatever the reason for election, the Councillor's Handbook will give an outline and guideline to the new councillor, and to the experienced, a greater awareness of the workings of his own authority.

The cost of the Councillor's Handbook is 75p per copy with bulk orders (40 or more) receiving 15% discount.

POLICE FORCES

The recommendations of the 1962 Royal Commission on the Police, as to changes in the provisions for the control and administration of police forces in the United Kingdom other than Northern Ireland, were the beginning on the one hand of a reduction in the number of police forces and on the other hand of a greater measure of control by the Home Secretary.

These changes were made law by the passing of the Police Act 1964, which stated in section 24 that the Secretary of State shall exercise his new powers in such a manner and to such extent as appears to him to be best calculated to promote the efficiency of the police. Hence the Home Secretary became responsible to answer questions in Parliament for all police forces, and not only the Metropolitan Police as previously.

It was in May 1966 that proposals for the amalgamation of certain police forces were first made by the Home Secretary, and in some quarters this was seen as indications for the future of regional police forces, or even of a national force. So it is interesting to trace the course of events since that date.

The amalgamations first proposed took some three years to complete: then five years later came the reorganization of local government in England and Wales and the creation of six metropolitan counties and thirty-nine English and eight Welsh non metropolitan counties. These operated from 1st April 1974, and in the following year in Scotland nine new regional councils and three new islands councils came into being on 16th May.

In the 1966 Municipal Year Book there is recorded forty four county forces (three being combined forces), the Metropolitan Police Force, and seventy-three separate forces in cities and county boroughs, including the City of London; these total 118 forces in England and Wales. In Scotland there were seventeen county forces (seven being combined forces) and thirteen city and burgh forces, a total of 30. The Royal Ulster Constabulary operated in Northern Ireland, so the United Kingdom had 149 separate police forces.

Ten years later in 1976 England and Wales had forty-three police forces, the Metropolitan Police Force, the City of London Police Force and forty-one forces in the counties (ten being combined forces). In Scotland there are just eight police forces, of which two are combined forces. Along with the Royal Ulster Constabulary, there are now 52 separate forces, a reduction of 97 (or virtually two-thirds) in the United Kingdom in ten years.

The full list of police forces is as follows:

REVIEW OF THE ELECTRICITY SUPPLY INDUSTRY IN ENGLAND AND WALES

The supply industry in England and Wales provides a service for 19 million consumers. During 1974–5 electricity sales to all classes of consumers totalled 195,944 million kWh, an increase of 3·4 per cent over the previous year, but if allowance is made for the fuel emergency of the previous year the underlying rate of growth was lower.

The industry's investment plans for new power stations, transmission and distribution lines are based on forecasts made each year for the national maximum demand in the seventh winter ahead. In March 1976 the supply industry adopted a figure of 52,000,000 kW as the forecast of the national maximum demand for the winter 1982/83. This forecast represented an average growth rate in electricity demand of 3·5 per cent per annum.

New generating plant commissioned by the Central Electricity Generating Board in the calendar year 1975 amounted to 685,000 kW, including a 500,000 kW generating unit at the Didcot coal-fired power station. The forty-nine 500,000kW and 6660,000kW units in service during 1975 provided nearly a half of system units at an efficiency approaching 34 per cent.

In the past, short-term peaks in the daily load curve on the electricity supply system have been met mainly by using older "time-expired" plant. Two other methods have been introduced—gas turbine plant and pumped storage amounting to 2,300,000kW at the end of 1975.

Load factor improvement has been tackled at the consumers' end with storage heating supplied at special off-peak rates notably through "White Meter" tariffs which offer cheaper units at night, usually between 10 pm and 7 am. From 1975–6 the Generating Board introduced a re-designed bulk supply tariff covering its sales to Area Boards which by switching emphasis from the winter peak to daily loads provides further incentive for load factor improvement.

Government fuel policy has been to make possible a national supply of energy at the lowest total cost to the community, taking into account social as well as economic considerations. It provides for the introduction of nuclear power and North Sea oil and gas, while at the same time supporting the coal industry. in fact, whilst other industries have rapidly reduced their consumption of coal, the electricity industry has more and more become the NCB's best customer. New coal-fired stations, principally of individual capacity up to 2 million kW, based on generating sets of size 500,000kW have been built in various parts of the country—in particular in the Midlands and Yorkshire. The Drax power station in Yorkshire has three units each of 660,000kW. Two oil-fired and one dual oil/coal-fired stations, each of 2 million kW, have been commissioned and oil-fired stations of 3,300,000kW, 1,980,000kW and 1,000,000kW are also under construction. The CEGB can switch fuel consumption of 10–15 million tons of coal or coal equivalent from coal to oil, or vice versa, according to market conditions.

The second nuclear programme, first announced in 1964 and extended a year later, will provide 6·5 million kW. The reactor design chosen is based on the Advanced Gas-cooled Reactor (AGR) developed by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority from the magnox system employed in the first nuclear programme. The AGR stations under construction in Dungeness 'B' in Kent (1,200,000kW); Hinkley Point 'B' in Somerset; Hartlepool, Co. Durham; and Heysham in Lancashire (all of 1,320,000kW). A fifth, Hunterson 'B' in Ayrshire (1,320,000kW) is being built by the South of Scotland Electricity Board. The first units at Hinkley Point 'B' and Hunterston 'B' were completed in February 1976. A third nuclear programme of 4 million kW was approved in July 1974, based on the steam generating heavy water reactor (SGHWR). Six 660,000kW reactor units will be built, four at Sizewell, Suffolk and two at Torness in East Lothian.

At the end of 1975 the national Grid system owned and operated by the Generating Board comprised 168 power stations and over 14,000 circuit kilometres of transmission lines at voltages up to 400,000 volts. It is the largest fully interconnected system under unified control in the world.

In 1960, in order to increase its power-carrying capacity, the Generating Board decided to raise the voltage of the 275,000-volt Supergrid to 400,000 volts—and to adopt 400,000 volts for major new lines. This also has the effect of keeping to a minimum the number of new lines required, thus contributing to the preservation of visual amenities. But 275,000 volts is being retained in some industrialized areas of high-load density where it is suited to local high-power distribution. The new system is nearing completion. Subsequent development will be largely in the connection of new power stations and the establishment of new tapping points to give increased supplies to the local lower voltage networks. The 400,000-volt system can probably be made to suffice until at least 1990 without the need for a high voltage network.

The voltage level below 275,000 volts is 132,000 volts, the original Grid; most of this network was transferred to the Area Electricity Boards on 1 April, 1969, and it is now their primary distribution system.

To investigate the scope for using direct current links in reinforcing their networks the Generating Board have constructed an underground dc link of 640,000kW capacity which carries the output from a 500,000kW generating unit at the Kingsnorth (Kent) power station to the 275,000/132,000-volt substations at Beddington and Willesden.

The Generating Board's transmission system is inter-connected with the systems of the South of Scotland Electricity Board and Electricité de France, the latter inter-connection via dc submarine cables across the English Channel operating at ±100,000 volts and permitting power exchanges of 160,000kW each way.

On the Area Electricity Boards' systems the next lowest voltage level to the 132,000-volt lines is 66,000 volts, but the backbone of their distribution systems is usually at 33,000 volts. Main feeders at this voltage feed major substations where the supply is transformed down to 11,000 volts or 6,000 volts. For domestic and other small consumers the supply is further transformed down to the standard voltage of 415/240 volts.

At the end of 1975 the total length of the Area Boards' distribution mains exceeded 575,000 circuit kilometres.

Rapid progress is being made with automatic reclosing of distribution circuits to reduce interruptions from transient faults. Increased live-line working and the use of mobile generators is further reducing the need for planned interruptions. An overall continuity of supply of 99·98 per cent is being achieved. Automatic data transmission handling and recording is helping to cope with the growing complexity of the network and to reduce costs. Since 1948, distribution engineering costs per kWh sold have increased by only 15 per cent despite inflation. Vigorous re-appraisal is in hand of methods to control off-peak loads.

Expenditure on research and development in 1974–5 amounted to £28·9 million. Increasing efforts are being devoted to research on distribution problems and into electrical appliances and methods of using electricity. In 1966 a Research Centre was established by the Electricity Council at Capenhurst, Cheshire to undertake intensive research in these two fields of work. Commercial and economic research into the characteristics of load, costs and market is also being intensified. All national promotional work is carried out by the Marketing Department of the Electricity Council.

A significant factor during the period 1967 to 1975 has been a fall in manpower of 61,000 employees i.e. of 26 per cent, whilst, over the period output has increased.

Total net assets (i.e. after depreciation) employed in the supply industry in England and Wales at 31 March, 1975 were £5,870 million. In 1974–5 the industry's total capital expenditure was £514 million.

The industry has provided a large proportion of its capital needs from internal resources, comprising profits after interest and depreciation charges; the rest comes from external borrowings by the Electricity Council on behalf of the industry.

From nationalization to 1974–5 self-financing averaged half of capital needs.

In March 1962 it was agreed with the Government that the industry as a whole would endeavour to earn a gross return (that is, depreciation, interest and profits after interest) of 12·4 per cent on net capital employed over the five years to 1966/67; financial objectives having been agreed for the Generating Board and each Area Board which would in total produce this return. But the price freeze of 1966 and the subsequent period of "severe restraint" made it inevitable that the industry would finish the quinquennium a little short of the objectives. A gross return of 12 per cent was achieved over the five years.

Because Government policy restricted the industry's freedom to increase prices, negotiations for new financial objectives were suspended, and the industry was asked to assume objectives of 12·4 per cent for 1967/68 and 12.3 per cent for 1968–69. The actual achievements were 11·7 per cent and 13·0 per cent respectively. A new financial objective was negotiated for the industry as a whole for the five year period 1969/70 to 1973/74 and was announced by the Government in October 1969. The industry agreed to earn a net return (that is, interest and profit after interest, of 7 per cent on the average capital employed during this period.

This compared with the target during the first quinquennium to 1966/67 of 6·7 per cent on the net return basis. In 1970 the rate of inflation quickened, but tariff increases since then have been restricted as a contribution to counter-inflationary policies. The size of the resulting accumulated shortfall on the financial objective rendered impossible the achievement of the overall target. The Government has paid compensation for this limitation of prices under the Statutory Corporation (Financial Provisions) Act 1974, amounting to £92·3 million for the three years 1970–1 to 1972–3, £17·3 million for 1973–4. Similar legislation in 1975 provided £257·6 million compensation in respect of 1974–5.

Principal Results for 1974–5 (figures in brackets are for 1973–4) Total revenue, including income from contracting and sales of fittings £2·656 million (£1,982 million) of which £2,435 million (£1,783 million) was from the sale of electricity.

Loss £258 million (loss £176 million). Net return on average net assets 2·3 per cent (3·0 per cent).

Income from contracting and sales of appliances £205 million (£188 million) resulting in an operating profit on this account of £4·5 million (£11·4 million).

Sales of electricity 195,944 million units to all consumers (3·4 per cent increase on previous year). Average price of electricity to all consumers £1·243p per unit (£0·941p per unit).

Capital requirements during the year £800 million (£576 million).

Maximum output capacity of the Generating Board's power stations at the end of the year 58,523,000 kW (58,026,000 kW).

Fuel consumed for all purposes in the Board's power stations 101·5 million tonnes of coal or coal equivalent—including 65 million tonnes of coal; 24 million tonnes coal equivalent of oil; 10 million tonnes coal equivalent of nuclear power.

Average thermal efficiency of the Board's steam power stations (excluding nuclear) 30·60 per cent.

Simultaneous maximum demand on the Board's system 40,973,000 kW (39,674,000 kW).

Employees at the end of the year 1972, 172,483 (171,224).

Following the reorganization of the electricity supply industry after the passing of the Electricity Act 1957, the statutory bodies comprising the electricity service in England and Wales are the Electricity Council, the Central Electricity Generating Board and the twelve Area Electricity Boards. The functions are described in general terms below.

The Electricity Council

This body has functioned from January 1958 as the central council for the supply industry in England and Wales for consultation on, and formulation of general policy; its main functions are to advise the Secretary of State for Energy on all matters affecting the supply industry, and to promote and assist the maintenance and development by the Central Electricity Generating Board and the Area Boards (known collectively as Electricity Boards) of an efficient, co-ordinated and economical system of electricity supply. The Council can also perform services for the Boards, and, in addition has certain specific functions, particularly in matters of finance, research and industrial relations.

The Central Electricity Generating Board

The Central Electricity Generating Board controls the operation and maintenance of power stations and the main transmission system and supply electricity in bulk to the twelve Area Electricity Boards in England and Wales. They are also responsible for the provision of new generating and transmission capacity including the siting and construction of new power stations and transmission lines. The Board's organization is made up of Headquarters and five Regions and two Development and Construction Divisions, all mainly self-contained.

Area electricity Boards

Each of the twelve Area Electricity Boards acquires bulk supplies of electricity from the Generating Boards and is responsible for distribution networks and sales of electricity to its Area consumers. Thus distribution and utilization of electricity, and also the contracting and sale of appliances side of the industry are their responsibilities.

Committee of Inquiry into the Structure of the Electricity Supply Industry in England and Wales

The Plowden Committee reported in December 1975—their main recommendation was that the industry should be unified, that a single statutory body "the Central Electricity Board", should take over the functions of the Electricity Council, CEGB and Area Boards.

REVIEW OF THE GAS INDUSTRY

On 1 January, 1973, the Gas Council and the Area Gas Boards were merged into the British Gas Corporation, as a result of Parliament passing the Gas Act 1972. The changing emphasis of the industry, resulting from the increased supply of natural gas from the North Sea fields, and the consequent run down in the local manufacture of gas from oil and coal, was the primary cause of this decision. While the Corporation now exercises control of the industry's policy throughout the country, as much autonomy as possible is delegated to the regional offices which have succeeded the Area Gas Boards, in view of the need for local, individual contact with the industry's 13½ million customers.

The industry's financial year is still 1 April–31 March. In the year to 31 March, 1975, gas output rose (for the fifteenth consecutive year) by 10·4 per cent to the new record total of 13,692 m therms. Of this 13,234 m therms was natural gas from the North Sea or other sources.

The conversion of customers' appliances to the direct supply of natural gas continued during the year with a total of 1,674,000 being completed. More than 11 million of the industry's customers were then (31 March, 1975) on direct supply.

During the year ended 31 March, 1975, the industry had a deficit of £42·3 m, compared with a deficit of £41·5 m in the previous year. This was as a result of price constraints imposed by the Government. Average revenue per therm of gas sold by the industry rose from 7·05p to 7·88p.

Sales of gas to domestic customers were 5,710 m therms compared with 5,035 m therms in the previous year; to industrial customers 5,921 m therms (5,299 m therms); and to commercial customers 1,301 m therms (1,153 m therms).

Total income from gas sales was £1,024 m compared with £813 m in the previous year. The number of customers increased from 13,559,000 to 13,682,000. Employees on 31 March, 1975 totalled 103,053 compared with 102,091 a year earlier.

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF LAND DEVELOPMENT

Consulting Editor: SIR DESMOND HEAP

General Editor: J. T. FARRAND

Assistant Editor: VICTOR MOORE

One loose-leaf volume

The effects of the Community Land Act 1975 and the proposals for Development Land Tax are important, radical and far-reaching and fraught with difficulties. There is a vital and pressing need for a work which gives detailed coverage of the provisions of these two measures, together with access to expert commentary, the cases, rules, regulations and circulars which will come as the law develops.

Sweet & Maxwell's new loose-leaf Encyclopedia of Land Development provides full, detailed and specialist coverage of the integrated planning and tax aspects of the new legislation, in a self-contained, fully cross-referenced and indexed volume.

Contents

The new Encyclopedia, initially in one volume, contains all the Community Land legislation and related provisions, plus Development Land Tax legislation, regulations and other relevant material.

The Editors

Sir Desmond Heap, under whose guidance the Encyclopedia of Planning established itself, leads as Consulting Editor of the Encyclopedia of Land Development. As General Editor, Professor J. T. Farrand, who is editor of The Conveyancer and has considerable experience in both the areas of taxation and property, has given special consideration to the conveyancing implications of the new legislation. Victor Moore, Assistant Editor of the Journal of Planning and Environment Law, will act as Assistant Editor, bringing to bear his experience in the fields of planning and compulsory purchase.

The Encyclopedia of Land Development will be an essential guide for lawyers, planners, surveyors and local authorities all of whom are directly affected as well as for accountants, estate managers and all who have commercial interests in land, for whom the measures have immediate implications.

This advertisement could be much shorter. . .

. . . if we listed all those things we didn't print or publish for local authorities. But as a company geared to answering the needs of a whole variety of local government departments since 1750, it's not surprising the range of material that Shaw and Sons produce. Such things as:

Local Government Forms

As the only publisher supplying every conceivable type of form, notice and record for every aspect of local government legislation, Shaw and Sons provide up to forty catalogues showing the full stock range. We can also print personalised forms relating to the particular needs of an authority.

Fine Arts

Shaw and Sons are able to offer a complete service based on many years experience of designing and production of Armorial Bearings and all civic insignia, book plates, heraldic shields, civic flags, illuminated addresses, etc.

Publications

In addition to an extensive list of books published under our own imprint, Shaw and Sons are able to supply works by any other publisher in the world, whether it be a book, magazine or periodical.

Systems

Shaw and Sons have for many years manufactured a variety of systems for local authorities, among them systems for receipting, rate instalments, rent collection, receipts for local land charges, fines and fixed penalties, cheque writing, wages etc.

Continuous Stationery

A rapidly growing aspect of Shaw and Sons' services is the provision of continuous stationery for local authority applications such as rate demands, instalments, rents and mortgages, housing and social service records, payrolls, etc.

Stationery

Shaw and Sons carry a large stock of Office Stationery and equipment both of a general nature and items developed for local government departments—amongst them envelopes, products for local authority records, engrossment papers, loose leaf binders and filing equipment, etc.

There isn't room on a single page to go into detail about our other services and facilities for cheques, National Giro documents, interest warrants, machine accounting stationery, year books, records and other printed stationery, but if you would like further details on these or our other services—many of which have been designed specifically for local government use—please contact your Shaw and Sons' representative or the Information Officer,

GOVERNMENT

SERVICE OF CATALOGUES AND INDEX CARDS

The service is intended to satisfy the varying requirements of users of Government Publications; some require to receive daily notification of issues; others are content to be advised once a week; some find their needs satisfied with a monthly list; others with a consolidated annual list; and many need lists according to subjects.

Daily List

Every day, except Saturdays, Sundays and public holidays, a list of publications issued is posted to subscribers. The List of Statutory Instruments prescribed under Section 3(1) of the Statutory Instruments Act, 1946, is published as part of the Daily List. This service is of value to all who must ascertain immediately what is being published by the Government from day to day.

The Daily List is also posted in weekly batches, and this cheaper arrangement will meet the needs of many subscribers.

Weekly List

A selection of government publications of interest to Local Authorities is compiled weekly and posted to subscribers.

Monthly Catalogue

The monthly catalogue includes a loose inset with short descriptions of important publications and is fully indexed. The catalogue is of special value to librarians, many of whom regard it as indispensable for Reference Libraries and for use in selecting material for permanent accessions.

Annual Catalogue

The annual catalogue comprises a fully indexed bibliography of all Government Publications issued in the year except Statutory Instruments. A consolidated index is issued every five years.

International Organizations

The publications of the United Nations, and those of its specialized agencies and of certain other international organizations, although not published by HM Stationery Office, are on sale at all Sale Offices and are included in the Daily List and are listed in a Supplement to the Annual Catalogue.

Statutory Instruments

Statutory Instruments are not included in the general Monthly or Annual Catalogues. Special monthly lists are published for January to May and July to November; a half-yearly list, covering the period January 1st to June 30th, and an annual list covering the whole year.

Index Cards

For those who wish to maintain a card catalogue of official publications, index cards, 5 inches by 3 inches carrying details of the number of pages and illustrations in addition to the information provided on the Daily List of Government Publications, can be supplied.

Sectional Lists

A catalogue of current non-parliamentary publications, with a selection of parliamentary publications, presented in separate lists according to the Government Departments sponsoring the publications listed. The series now comprises over sixty lists which are brought up-to-date periodically. Issue is free to applicants.

Public Relations—A Change of Direction

The Local Government Public Relations Service has been the subject of considerable criticism in recent times. It has been described variously as "an unnecessary and expensive luxury", "a drain on resources", "a propaganda machine for the majority party", "a whitewash machine", and many other things none of which really display any degree of knowledge of the true role of the Local Authority Public Relations Service.

It might be useful to consider the reasons for this critical attitude to Public Relations; to look at the possible shortcomings within the service itself and the external forces which have led to the PR men being used as "fall-guys" or "whipping boys".

Perhaps the greatest shortcoming within the service itself is the notorious failure of PR men to promote the service which they provide. Resources available to PR men are small, and these resources are devoted to the promotion of the Local Authority and its facilities. To divert such resources to "PR for PR" would achieve little in terms of service to ratepayers although it might well enhance the reputations of the PR men involved and encourage public acceptance of the services they provide. The result of this is that the public read reports of expenditure on Public Relations without having a clear understanding of the meaning of the term "Public Relations" or of the range of services provided by the Public Relations Service.

The Public Relations Service is in many of the new authorities something new. It did not exist as a specialist unit before re-organization; it represents on the face of it, a new area of expenditure brought about by re-organization, and it is regarded as yet another burden which the already hard-pressed ratepayer must bear. What is not recognised by the public is that all authorities, before and after re-organization, spent money and manpower resources on Public Relations whether or not as a formalized service. The setting up of a specialist unit does not necessarily involve an increase in expenditure, but should certainly result in a more effective use of available resources and consequently a better service to the customers.

Talking of resources brings me to the oft expressed view that the closure of the PR unit would results in a decrease in the rates levy. This argument falls down on two counts. First, the level of resources available for Public Relations work is negligible in terms of the overall budget. For example, the PR Budget in Bradford Metropolitan District, which is perhaps more generous than most, is £100,000 approx, against the Authority's overall budget of £100,000,000. Saving the whole of the PR budget would have no noticeable effect on the rates. Second, even if the PR unit were abolished the work would still have to be done, and could, because of the lack of co-ordination and professional expertise, cost more to achieve less.

The National Scene

The effectiveness of the Public Relations service in any given authority depends not only on the energy and expertise of the professional staff employed but also, and to a far greater degree, on the level of commitment by the authority to the need for a Public Relations service, and the amount of resources the authority is prepared to allocate for the purpose. It is obvious, looking round the country, that many authorities do not really understand the range of services which can be provided by an efficient PR unit, or the considerable benefits which can accrue to the ratepayers and to the district as a whole by the adoption and implementation of effective Public Relations policies and objectives.

In far too many cases, the Public Relations unit is regarded as the unit which simply pushes out information willy-nilly to the media, answers complaints published by the media, or made by ratepayers, "kills" awkward stories, and generally does nothing more than try to present the local authority in a favourable light. With this kind of brief, the PR man can play no more than a passive role, and indeed much of his work will be of a negative nature. The resources allocated are not being put to the most effective use and the time has come for a complete re-think of the aims and objectives of the Public Relations service, and the establishment of objectives which can be set for and achieved by all local authorities, with local adjustments to meet local circumstances. It is this lack of clear objectives and a common approach which, in my opinion, gives rise to much of the confusion and misunderstanding which currently exist as far as Public Relations is concerned.

Public Relations is a tool of Management, and must be recognized as such. As with any tool it is most effective in the hands of skilled and experienced people; people who are prepared to advise on its most effective use and on the greatest benefit which can be derived from it. Public Relations cannot work in a vacuum; it needs on the one had clearly defined objectives and policies and on the other the various publics for the benefit of whom the objectives and policies have been formulated. Policies must be progressive and objectives acceptable, desirable and achievable. Bradford Metropolitan District Council never intended its Public Relations Office to adopt a passive role, and I make no apologies for describing the objectives of and achievements of that office, as it is the one with which I am most closely connected.

Bradford's Public Relations Office was set up in 1974 and currently has a staff of eleven, of whom five are professional PR staff. As might have been expected, the first year or so was spent in recruiting the right staff and laying the foundations for an effective service, at the same time carrying out a reasonably heavy work programme. During the second year the staff became a team; a team capable of assessing the PR problems presented, and co-ordinating their efforts in achieving solutions. However, the work which was being done was not geared to any consciously established objectives or priorities, and there was a tendency to accept every commission from divisions of the Council's service.

During the latter part of 1975 and early 1976 the objectives of the Public Relations Office were re-drawn and targets for 1976/7 were established. The targets are measurable, programmed and costed, and the manpower resource requirement established. Provision has been made for regular monitoring of achievement against target, with a quarterly review provision built into the programme.

The objectives of the Public Relations Office can be summarized in three words—Information, Participation and Prosperity. Any project undertaken by the office must fall within at least one of these categories and must also have one other attribute, that of being of benefit to the ratepayers.

Making Public Relations Work

The Information and Participation objectives of the office fall broadly into the same pattern as most other Public Relations Offices, and it is not proposed to describe these in any great detail here. Prosperity as an objective is one which is given a very high priority and in this context prosperity is not regarded simply as an increase in pounds and pence, but includes improvements in the quality of life. It is not concerned solely with increasing revenue to the rate fund but also with the attraction of new industry, and increased prosperity in the fields of existing industry and commerce. It is concerned with the attraction of new capital investment and an influx of new spending power. To achieve these objectives the Public Relations unit must also work not only with all divisions of the Councils' service but also with many organizations not directly connected with the Council.

Quality of Life

Media campaigns play a major role in the programme aimed at improving the quality of life. Three such campaigns stand out as important contributions in this field. The first of these was an effort to tackle the problem of shortage of foster parents, a problem which exists in most, if not all, local authorities. The Bradford campaign preceded the national campaign and resulted in over 560 enquiries, from which over 130 applications were received. The campaign was conducted in collaboration with the Local Press, the Social Services Division, and the Foster Parent Association.

The Council needed 84 Foster Parents and over 40 have already been appointed. More could follow as the applications are sifted. This campaign has made it possible to provide a vastly improved service for children in need and the social benefits are incalculable.

The second campaign dealt with the problems of hypothermia and again the Local Press co-operated. The Public Relations Office also persuaded representatives of the Gas and Electricity Boards, the Department of Health and Social Security and the Area Health Authority to participate. The Social Services Division was again involved. The problems of hypothermia and preventive facilities available received very wide publicity, and although there is no way of measuring results if only one life was saved the effort was worthwhile.

The third campaign dealt with the problems of adult illiteracy. This campaign was unusual in that the press could not be used, and the local commercial radio station mounted the campaign in collaboration with the Public Relations Office, the Adult Literacy Group and the Education Directorate. In this campaign, which lasted two weeks, over 200 adult illiterates were enrolled as students, and 19 volunteer tutors. Again the social benefits are immeasurable.

Prosperity

There are many ways in which a Public Relations Office can play its part in achieving economies or increasing revenue for the authority. Examples of this can be found in the rationalization and co-ordination of advertising which it is estimated will result in a saving of over £5000 in general media advertising (excluding recruitment) over the next year, and in the promotion of fee earning services, e.g. theatres, recreational facilities, etc.

Equally important is the promotion of the prosperity of the area, and this can only be achieved by promoting the area outside the boundaries. Already the Public Relations Office has established links with the Tourist Board, the Regional Development Council, the British Association of Conference Towns, Chambers of Commerce and Industry and other bodies, all of whom have an interest in improving the prosperity of the area, and can make a contribution in expertise and resources to that end. The office has also established outlets for Bradford promotional literature throughout the UK and Western Europe.

Perhaps the most exciting prospect in this field is the promotion of Bradford as a conference centre. It is ideally situated, and has the facilities necessary, including a conference advisory service situated within the Public Relations Office, to make Bradford attractive to conference secretaries and delegates. For this purpose the Public Relations Office has established a standing working party on which are represented the local hotels, the University, the Chamber of Commerce, the Tourist Board, the Regional Development Council and the British Association of Conference Towns.

This working party was established early in 1976 and by April of that year conferences which would bring an estimated £30,000 of gross spending power to the district have been attracted. This is a small beginning, but the potential is enormous.

Change of Direction

This review has dealt briefly with some of the work of the Bradford Public Relations Office. It has not covered the wide range of services and activities provided by that office adequately, but it has, I hope, demonstrated the need for a change of direction in local authority public relations services. The days of the passive routine press service have gone. Press services are essential, but only as part of a much wider, more aggressive service designed to promote the services and the local authority area, and actively to assist others involved in the promotion of the general well-being and prosperity of the residents.

LOCAL OMBUDSMEN

Two Commissions for Local Administration—one for England and one for Wales—were established under the Local Government Act 1974 to investigate complaints from members of the public about injustice caused by maladministration in local government. The English Commission at present consists of three Local Commissioners, each of whom will investigate complaints arising in a particular area of the country, and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

The names of the Local Commissioners and the local government areas and water authorities for which they are responsible are:

THE BARONESS SEROTA Chairman of the Commission

Greater London, Surrey, Kent, East and West Sussex.
The Thames and Southern Water Authorities.

F. P. COOK

Northumberland, Cumbria, Durham, Tyne and Wear, Cleveland, Merseyside, Lancashire, Greater Manchester, North Yorkshire, West Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, Humberside, Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire, Cambridgeshire, Norfolk and Suffolk.
The North West, Northumbrian, Yorkshire and Anglian Water Authorities.

D. B. HARRISON

Cheshire, Salop, Staffordshire, West Midlands, Hereford and Worcester, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Northamptonshire, Cornwall (with Isles of Scilly), Devon, Somerset, Avon, Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, Dorset, Oxfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Essex, Berkshire, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight.

The Severn-Trent, Wessex and South West Water Authorities.

There is a separate Commission for Wales. The area of the Welsh National Water Development Authority extends into parts of the English counties along the border: any complaint against that Authority arising in one of these areas of England should be addressed to the Commissioner for Local Administration in Wales, Portland Hse., 22 Newport Rd., Cardiff, CF21 DB.

A separate Commissioner for Scotland was appointed under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1975. 125 Princes St., Edinburgh, EH1 4AD.

Maladministration is not defined in the Act and it will be for Local Commissioners to decide whether it has occurred. But it refers for example to the way in which an authority's decision has been taken. Maladministration may be taken to cover administrative action (or inaction) based on or influenced by improper considerations or conduct. Arbitrariness, malice or bias, including unfair discrimination, are examples of improper considerations. Neglect, unjustifiable delay, incompetence, failure to observe relevant rules or procedures, failure to take relevant considerations into account, failure to establish or review procedures where there is a duty or obligation on a body to do so or the use of faulty systems are examples of improper conduct. The Commissioner has no power to question the merits of a decision taken without maladministration.

A Local Commissioner may accept complaints against the following:

a. any county council;
b. any district borough council;
c. the Greater London Council and the Inner London Education Authority;
d. any London borough council;
e. the Common Council of the City of London;
f. the Council of the Isles of Scilly;
g. any joint board of local authorities, including the National Park boards;
h. any regional water authority;
i. any police authority, other than the Home Secretary (who is the police authority for the Metropolis).

This list includes all committees, members and officers of those authorities.

Parish councils are not open to investigation by a Local Commissioner, unless they are acting as agents for other local authorities.

The Local Commissioner will not investigate any complaint until it has been brought to the attention of the authority complained against, either by the person aggrieved (or his personal representative) or by a member of the authority on behalf of that person, and until the authority has had a reasonable time in which to reply to the complaint.

A complaint intended for reference to a Local Commissioner should be made in writing to a member of the authority complained against with a request that it should be sent to the Local Commissioner. It should state the action which it is alleged constitutes maladministration. If the member does not refer the complaint to the Local Commissioner, the person aggrieved may ask the Commissioner to accept his complaint direct. A COMPLAINT SHOULD NOT BE ADDRESSED DIRECTLY TO A LOCAL COMMISSIONER IN THE FIRST INSTANCE.

LOCAL COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO POWER TO INVESTIGATE COMPLAINTS RELATING TO ACTION TAKEN BEFORE 1 APRIL 1974. This was the day on which the new local authorities (outside London) took over from their predecessors and the regional water authorities came into existence. (The relevant date in Scotland is 16 May, 1975).

A complaint may be made by an individual, or by any body of persons (excluding a local authority, nationalized industry or other public body). Normally the complaint must be made by the person who claims to have suffered personal injustice, though exceptions may be made if that person has died or is for any reason unable to act for himself or herself.

Complaints must normally be made to a member within TWELVE MONTHS of the day when the matters complained of come to the notice of the aggrieved person, but a Local Commissioner has power to accept a complaint outside this time-limit if he considers that there are special circumstances which make it proper to do so.

PROGRESS

In the year ended 31 March, 1976 the three English Local Commissioners received a total of 2,249 complaints, of which 1,749 were, for various reasons, not acceptable for investigation. During the year, 98 investigations were completed and reports issued and 88 investigations were in progress at the end of the year. Planning matters provided the highest proportion of complaints (about 31% of the total) followed by housing (21%) and education (9%).

Inquiries about the English Commission should be put to the Secretary—M. R. Hyde, at 21 Queen Anne's Gate, London, SW1H 9BU (Telephone: 01-930 3333).

COMMISSION FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN WALES

Portland Hse., 22 Newport Rd., Cardiff, CF2 1DB (Cardiff 371073/4).

Local Commissioner: D. W. Jones-Williams, OBE, MC
Secretary: Hywel F. Jones, MA, IPFA

The Commission for Local Administration in Wales was constituted by Section 23(1)(b) of the Local Government Act 1974, and consists of one Local Commissioner and the Parliamentary Commissioner, exofficio.

The work of the Commission is concerned with complaints alleging maladministration by any of the 8 county councils, 37 district councils, 4 police authorities in Wales, the Land Authority for Wales and the Welsh National Water Development Authority. The jurisdiction of the Commission also extends to any joint board, the constitutent authorities of which are all local authorities.

Under Paragraph 4(4) of Schedule 4 of the Local Government Act 1974, the Commission is required to ensure that staff are available to deal with complaints in the Welsh language. The Local Commissioner, the Secretary and the Investigator are all fluent in Welsh and the Commission is able therefore to comply with the statutory obligation.

The Commission produced a bilingual pamphlet, "Your Local Ombudsman in Wales", which was distributed to all authorities within the jurisdiction of the Commission, government departments, citizens' advice bureaux and various other bodies likely to be interested in the work of the Commission. Copies of the pamphlet were supplied to representatives of the press, radio and television throughout the whole of Wales, together with a press statement, summarizing the work of the Commission.

All persons who enquire about the work of the Commission are given a copy of this bilingual pamphlet.

During the year the Local Commissioner and the staff of the Commission have given talks in English and Welsh to various interested bodies. The Local Commissioner has appeared on local and national radio and in March 1976 B.B.C. Wales featured the work of the Local Ombudsman in a four minute item as part of the programme "Wales Today".

Generally speaking, the effect of this publicity campaign and the publicity obtained from the publication of the various reports of the Local Commissioner has led to an awareness of the existence of the Commission in Wales. Complaints are now being received from all over Wales. Complaints have been made against all county councils in Wales, whilst only 4 of the 37 district councils have not been the subject of a formal complaint.

Over two-thirds of the complaints received are complaints which are received direct from members of the public. Where the complaints are clearly outside the jurisdiction of the Local Commissioner, they are rejected forthwith. Other complaints are referred back to the complainant with advice on the correct method of referring the complaint to the Local Commissioner through an elected member of the authority complained against and these account for one third of the total number of complaints received.

The Local Commissioner cannot answer enquiries from the press or public about specific cases. He will, however, be ready to answer general enquiries about his jurisdiction, e.g. whether a particular type of action by a particular body is within his scope to investigate.

During 1975/76 the variety of complaints has increased. Whilst complaints about planning matters and the housing services still predominate, there has been an increase in recent months in the number of services complained against.

Planning applications account for 39 per cent and housing services 23 per cent of the total formal complaints received in 1975/76. These proportions compare with 48 per cent and 28 per cent respectively in respect of the seven months to 31st March, 1975.

COMMISSION FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN SCOTLAND

125 Princes St., Edinburgh, EH2 4AD (031-226 2823).

Commissioner: R. Moore, CBE.
Secretary: K. Bratton.

The appointment of a Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland was authorized by the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1975 and Robert Moore, CBE took up this post of 1 January, 1976.

However the appointment was announced publicly on 29 August, 1975 and almost immediately he began to receive letters of complaint which were handled in the first instance with the aid of temporary staff from the Scottish Office. From the beginning of 1976 permanent staff were appointed, the Secretary to the Commissioner taking up his post on 1 January, the Senior Investigator a month later, and an Administrative Officer on 1 March. These officers together with a personal assistant and a junior typist comprised the whole-time staff at 31 March.

The Act of 1975 also provided for a "designated body" for Scotland to exercise supporting functions including publishing the annual report and approving the numbers and salaries of staff. The Commission for Local Authority Accounts was designated by the Secretary of State to assume this role.

The announcement of the appointment of an "Ombudsman" for Scotland attracted a great deal of publicity, partly because of the interest then current in local government affairs and partly because the role of an "Ombudsman" had by that time become generally known.

Two press conferences have been held, one in August 1975 when the appointment was made public and the second in March 1976 to mark the opening of the office at 125 Princes St., Edinburgh and the publication of the leaflet "Your Local Authority Ombudsman in Scotland".

In the period ended 31 March, 1976 the Commissioner received a total of 78 complaints, of which 36 were, for various reasons, not acceptable for investigation. Although no investigation was completed in this short period 9 investigations were in progress at the end of the period. Housing matters provided the highest proportion of complaints (about 28% of the total) followed by Planning (19%) and Education (9%).

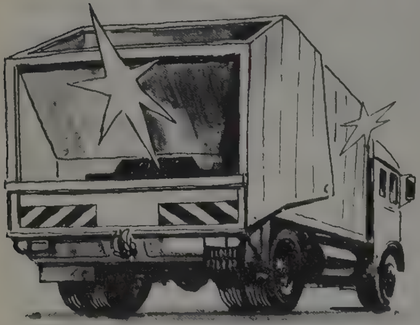
We can keep your reputation spotless



Municipal vehicles are on show all the time. But to look their best, they need regular cleaning. And that costs a lot of money if you're still using mops and buckets.

Fortunately there is a very easy way to keep your fleet clean and save money (as many authorities such as Kirklees, GLC and Cambridge have already found).

Install a Britannia TW automatic washer.

This versatile unit can clean a 40ft tanker in under 2 minutes. Road diggers, street cleaners, you name it, the Britannia TW will keep it sparkling clean.

Operating costs are remarkably low. Which means you can clean the whole fleet at least twice a week. And by installing a chassis washer too, you'll also make maintenance much easier and increase the useful life of the vehicles.

With a Britannia unit in your depot, you can afford to show off all the time.

The Buhler Treatment – World Wide

Buhler Hammer Mills serve the world by reducing household or industrial refuse by means of pulverisation as a pre-treatment to land-fill, composting, low or high density baling and incineration. It's not a glamorous occupation . . . but a vital one in today's world of increasing garbage.

Powerful motors grind heavy, wear-resistant rotors to hammer and grind coarse material into a more acceptable homogeneity; replaceable grinding plates and simple, ultra-sturdy construction ensure long trouble-free operation.

Review by I. L. COOPER, FInstSWM
Director of Cleansing, City of Westminster

In common with all local authority services, the solid waste management service faces in 1977 a period of severe financial restraint and inevitably a postponement of most of the improved services recommended by various working parties. The sections of the Control of Pollution Act which would improve standards but cost money will almost certainly not be implemented until the national economy has substantially improved.

To say the situation is confused is a gross understatement, as at the time or writing this review in the Spring of 1976 two government ministers appear to be making contradictory statements regarding the financing of solid waste management services The Secretary of State for the Environment has indicated that some reduction in the standards of refuse collection and disposal will be necessary, but a few weeks later the Chancellor of the Exchequer in a statement to Parliament spoke of the need to improve standards of refuse collection and disposal.

In addition, recent legislation in the shape of the Health and Safety at Work Act and the Sex Discrimination Act will have a considerable effect on the service. The desirability of these acts is not in question, but the effect of the former at the very least will impose considerable strain on existing staff in meeting requirements regarding training and ensuring proper compliance with the requirements of the act in respect of plant and equipment safety measures and it will be most surprising if most local authorities are not faced with additional expenditure in relation to buildings and equipment, in order to comply fully with legal requirements. Even the Sex Discrimination Act can have a significant effect on solid waste management services expenditure. Traditionally (because of the physical nature of the work) refuse collection, disposal and street cleansing have been almost exclusively male occupations and in consequence changing, working and toilet facilities have been provided for males only. Advice has been given however that in future the lack of these facilities for females will not be accepted as a reason for not employing female workers. In order, therefore, not to fall foul of the Sex Discrimination Act it would seem that these facilities will have to be provided at each place of employment.

The financial effect of the above mentioned legislation could have a significant effect on local authority budgets and even although the current directive to local authorities is that they meet certain expenditure, the net result arising from additional costs which have arisen from recent legislation must inevitably mean a reduction in the standard of service given to ratepayers.

This poses particularly difficult problems, especially relating to solid waste collection and disposal as in this service the local authority has no control over the two vital factors affecting costs volume and tonnage to be collected and treated. Most authorities, in deciding frequency of collection have regard to three main factors (1) the health aspect of refuse remaining on premises for more than seven days; (2) the limited space available at many premises for refuse storage and; (3) the vehicle capacity required to meet the needs of (1) and (2). From this short explanation it will be realized that substantial reductions in expenditure cannot be achieved simply by reducing the frequency of collection and equally, at the disposal or treatment end over a period of a month, quarter or year the total tonnage handled remains the same regardless of frequencies of delivery.

On the technical side the financial restraints will clearly make the effects apparent. In general the cost of landfill is about £2 per tonne and incineration about £8 per tonne. It will therefore be most surprising if any local authority approves new plans for the erection of refuse incineration plant. Some very interesting development work is currently progressing on the production from refuse of a fuel in the form of pellets which could be used commercially as a replacement for coal or oil.

In theory at least with the national balance of payments problems and the need to conserve raw materials, there ought to be a concentrated effort in the field of recycling. In 1975 and 1976 the Government produced a welter of advice on this subject set up the Waste Management Advisory Council and a special group to tackle waste paper recycling Very little real action has resulted, however, and fundamentally local authorities have to use commercial judgement in relation to recycling. Unless, therefore, they can be confident that their recycling activities are going to show a profit it is not possible for them to participate, and recent experience leaves no room for such confidence.

GREATER LONDON COUNCIL

Solid Wastes Management Service

The Greater London Council is responsible for disposing of over 2¾million tonnes of refuse a year collected by the London Boroughs and the City of London from the 610 square miles of Greater London and delivered direct by the public under the provisions of the Civic Amenities Act, 1967. At the present time 80% to 85% is disposed of under controlled tipping arrangements to reclaim worked-out mineral excavations or marsh land. The remainder is incinerated. The service is split for operational purposes into three geographical areas (North West, South and East) and employs some 500 operative staff. Of the total tonnage, approximately 580,000 tonnes, are conveyed to land reclamation sites by barges on the River Thames. 550,000 tonnes go direct to landfill sites or incineration plants in the Borough collection vehicles: 1¼ million tonnes are carried in bulk transport vehicles operated by contractors or the Council.

The new Edmonton incinerator plant handled 378,000 tonnes of refuse in 1974–5, providing an income of nearly £720,000 from the sale of electricity and clinker. The sale of scrap metal from this and other plants realized an income of £100,000 and a further £113,000 from derelict cars.

The reclamation of derelict land by controlled tipping will continue for many years as a major method of disposal. Three rail transfer stations are planned for west and north-west London and work is well advanced on one of these. A new road transfer station in east London has been completed. All these transfer stations will use compaction equipment in conjunction with containers to obtain maximum payloads and clean handling.

Review by BRIAN RUSBRIDGE

Secretary, Local Authorities Conditions of Service Advisory Board

The temptation for anyone required to write early in the year a "review" of local government service conditions which will not be published till the coming winter is to take refuge in polite generalizations and vague generalities. I will try to resist the temptation.

As I write, the political sky is obscure; there is always the possibility of a general election and a change in the party in power. But, as it now seems to me, no change of party colour is likely to be followed by a major change of economic policy in so far as it impinges on local government employees, their numbers, their pay and other conditions of employment.

The drive to economy is likely to be unaffected (or perhaps intensified) whether or not the government takes on a new hue. The central government, having skilfully diverted attention from the much greater rise in national taxation in recent years by concentrating criticism on the rates, are unlikely to surrender the advantage they have gained by this device. Equally they are likely to continue their implications that local authorities employ too many people, while omitting to make plain the ever-growing demands placed on local authorities by new legislation for which central government is itself responsible.

A mass of such legislation came into effect as the year advanced. Early in 1976, the Local Authorities Conditions of Service Advisory Board published The LACSAB Employee Relations Handbook. This could be seen as an indication of the subjects with which local authorities as employers were most concerned at that time, the everlasting question of pay being temporarily put aside for reasons to be discussed later.

The handbook was designed to provide information and advice on the state of the law as amended by the numerous statutes affecting employer/employee relations. These included the monumental Employment Protection Act 1975 which in my preface to the handbook I described as the most complex law ever passed by Parliament on the rights of individual employees and with immense implications for employers.

The handbook also dealt with amendments to existing law relating to redundancy payments, the Contracts of Employment Act 1972, as well as new or impending legislation such as the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 and the then impending Trade Union and Labour Relations (Amendment) Bill with its important provisions relating to trade union recognition and union membership agreements, as closed shop arrangements came to be called. At the same time, the Government had announced proposals for tightening up the law relating to racial discrimination and these were also covered in the handbook.

It has now become established practice for LACSAB to supplement the series of guides they publish in book form by advisory bulletins which are issued whenever significant changes in the statutory requirements come about. This is proving of increasing advantage to local authorities because so many of the new laws are not brought into operation as a whole but depend on piecemeal commencement orders made by the appropriate Secretary of State, each covering one or more parts of the Acts.

The advisory board emphasize that, in issuing guidance in this way, they are not attempting to lay down policies which authorities should follow but simply giving them the legal facts which will enable them to judge how to comply with their statutory obligations. The local authority associations consider policy issues both when legislation is in the formative stage and when it has been completed, and they may or may not think it proper to offer advice to their constituent members; many of the new requirements again leave room for negotiation over the manner of implementation and these fall to be determined through provincial or national negotiating bodies.

The guidance which LACSAB offers is not limited to new legislation but takes full account of earlier laws on the same subjects. Thus the handbook to which I have referred incorporates the main provisions of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974 with any necessary amendments.

When it comes to reviewing the trends in service conditions in 1976 the difficulties are even greater than on other subjects, for so much remains obscure. LACSAB, as I have shown, are actively offering advice on many of the personnel tasks facing local authorities, but they remain mindful of the cardinal issues of pay and other conditions of employment.

At the time I am writing, no cut-and-dried policies could be evolved. The state of the national economy, the uncertainties of the political scene, and the inescapable fact that local government attitudes must be conditioned by central government decisions made it impossible to do more than discuss possibilities and the merits and demerits of alternative courses.

Links with cental government remained close. For instance, the local authorities were collaborating with government departments in collecting data about the numbers of staff employed in local government and the grading methods employed. On behalf of local government as a whole, LACSAB were participating in a joint (i.e. central and local) manpower watch to obtain information about staff numbers and grades. It was too early to draw any general deductions, but as the figures are collected quarter by quarter it should become possible to measure trends, to compare staffing levels in one place against those elsewhere, and enable authorities whose standards seem to be above average to examine the reasons and take any necessary corrective action.

Such comparisons over time will, of course, be complicated by the increasing tasks being placed on local authorities' shoulders by legislation, particularly in such fields of personnel management as have already been mentioned and such major new responsibilities as those imposed by the Community Land Act. To assess the burdens of new requirements against the economies through reduced standards resulting from reductions in local expenditure will require highly expert calculations. As recorded last year, LACSAB staffing has been strengthened by the inclusion of specialists in statistical and related techniques of manpower measurement.

Studies are being made, for instance, of pay and manpower records, with special reference to computerization. In this, as in all of their activities, the board remain an advisory organization, suggesting advantageous methods without in any way seeking to impose uniform policies on local bodies.

The subject of pay standards remains the most delicate of subjects with which the board have to deal. Though strongly influenced by government-prescribed policies and practice within the central government service, local government continues to offer independent views when occasion demands. In the matter of London weighting, for instance, it expressed opposition to any additions in the economic circumstances of 1976; but when the government made a deal with their own staff organizations, the local authority machinery had to be brought into play in an attempt to negotiate suitable terms in their services.

On general pay policy—the shape of the second stage on national incomes—LACSAB and the national negotiating bodies had not reached any conclusion as I wrote this article.* That is not to say that they have been unconcerned. Consultations between the national and provincial and local employing bodies have been continuous. The pros and cons of percentage versus fixed increase (or a combination of the two) have been closely examined. When conclusions have been reached they are to be discussed with the appropriate ministers of the crown.

The advisory board's focus and activities are changing with the times. Pay and conditions remain one of the essential branches of their work, but industrial relations—particularly those arising from legislation—and manpower strategies are assuming equal importance.

Elected members from the local authority associations and from Scotland and Northern Ireland, together with others from the national negotiating bodies, are now using the board, as was always intended, as a convenient forum for reviewing every aspect of local government manpower.

From this broad base organizations like the Local Government Training Board or the Local Authorities Management Services and Computer Committee are able to assess the needs and priorities for their specialist functions. The national employers, for their part, are able to see clearly the relationship which one group has with another and— of paramount importance— the local authority associations can find a basis for determining their forward-looking policies.

* (An agreement was subsequently reached for the pay of administrative, professional, technical and clerical staff to be increased by £6 a week from 1st July 1976. This was within the 1975 national incomes policy and will operate till July 1977.—Ed.)

LOCAL AUTHORITIES' CONDITIONS OF SERVICE ADVISORY BOARD

The functions of the Board, established in 1948, are to co-ordinate the activities of the employers' sides of local government wage-negotiating organizations, to provide a joint secretariat for those bodies, to maintain liaison with other employers, and to obtain and disseminate information on service conditions.

The Board consists of 21 representatives appointed by the associations of local authorities, the Greater London Council, the employers' sides of the first three negotiating bodies named below, the official side of the Police Council for the United Kingdom, the employers' side of the Fire Services National Council, and the Scottish National Councils.

Joint Negotiating Committee for Coroners.

The number of employees within the purview of this negotiating machinery is estimated at about 2.2 million.

Since the Board was established in 1948 there has been a continuous extension of its interests and in the number, responsibilities, and authority of the negotiating bodies associated with it. Not only has the national determination of service conditions come to be accepted practice in all spheres, but other important duties have also been placed upon the joint negotiating bodies: the growth of national settlements has led to the use of national disputes machinery; the joint councils have created panels, meeting regularly throughout the year to determine disputes arising under joint agreements, relating either to individuals or to classes of workers. There is, too, an increasing tendency for disputes arising at provincial level to be referred to the national bodies for settlement

The Board, through its secretariat, is available to give local authorities information and advice in all matters concerning their relations with their employees, and, in particular, advice relating to establishment problems, grading of all or of individual posts, and industrial relations generally; the local authorities have availed themselves freely of this service. Some have sought advice on arbitration matters, and in several instances the Board's secretariat has acted on behalf of the authority or been in attendance advising at the hearing.

The work of the Board has led to the development of close liaison with employers in other fields of industry. This has become a regular feature of the day-to-day work of the secretariat and provides a two-way channel, information being sought and views exchanged on both sides.

The Advisory Board's office is at 41 Belgrave Sq., London, SW1X 8NZ (01-235 9801) and its secretary is B. J. Rusbridge.

SALARIES AND WAGES IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The figures are the latest available at the time of going to press. The date shown for each category is that from which the rates quoted came into operation. For certain categories of local government employees separate rates apply respectively in England and Wales and in Scotland; where no distinction is made in the following tables, common standards apply. For reasons of space, particulars are given only of the major groups.

NOTE: Information regarding new national agreements reached subsequent to the printing of this Section are, where possible, printed after lists of officers in Section 40.

The fulcrum point salary is to be determined by reference to population as for chief executives. This may then be adjusted upwards or downwards by not more than three increments in each case in the light of the actual duties and responsibilities of the post and the management structure adopted by the authority. A further adjustment of two additional increments may be made in the light of defined special factors but the total addition to the fulcrum point salary must not exceed four increments.

The NJC for Local Authorities APT & C Services have a similar agreement for Chief Officers within the scope of the NJC, with the same range of fulcrum point salaries, but with differing criteria and no limit on the increments below the fulcrum point salary.

NEW TOWNS

The salaries of chief officers of new town development corporations and similarly graded staff of the Commission for New Towns are allied to those of Civil Service assistant secretaries. From 1st April 1975 the range was £8,650 to £11,000. The salaries of other administrative, professional, technical and clerical staff are broadly similar to those of the corresponding grades in local government and were adjusted from 1st July 1975.

Review by W. B. HARBERT, AAPSW
Director of Social Services, Avon C.C.

The story of the personal social services in the first half of the 1970's was one of rapid expansion. Stimulated by the Seebohm reorganization in 1971, Social Services Departments increased their share of local authority budgets and developed services at a phenomenal rate. Government policy statements further encouraged local authorities to invest more resources in new buildings and staff; when calling for 10-year plans in 1972, the Department of Health and Social Security indicated that authorities should plan in the expectation that real growth would be at an annual rate of 10% for ten years. Thus not only was there a massive expansion in provision but plans were laid for a steady growth in the years ahead. Moreover, expectations were aroused. Local authority members and officers, voluntary organizations and the clients themselves began to believe that expansion of the newly-formed social services departments at a rate far exceeding the growth of the national economy was a birthright. They were soon to be disillusioned.

As social services have developed so new needs have become apparent and new demands have been made. Many departments reported a 30% increase in work following the decentralization of social work offices and some have experienced an even greater expansion of demand. The commissioning of new old people's homes and hostels for the mentally handicapped stimulates interest and demand; people who have given up hope of obtaining a place in such establishments come forward to seek assistance so that waiting lists often lengthen as provision improves. As departments have begun to make headway with clients in dire distress so other groups with less extreme problems have emerged to press their claims for assistance. Services that were thought to be luxuries in years gone by have now become rights and problems that were once thought to be the responsibility of the individual and his family have become the focus of public concern.

It is against this background of headlong growth and confident expectation of continued expansion that the government applied the financial brakes and brought hopes, dreams and plans crashing to the ground. From the carnage it is necessary to build a new philosophy for the social services. There are encouraging signs that the government is prepared to engage itself in this task. For example, the consultative document "Priorities for Health and Personal Social Services in England" sets out proposals for the development of services covering the period until 1980 against the background of the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd 6393). Social services committees are also facing the situation squarely and re-examining what can be done by a redeployment of existing resources. Emphasis is now being placed on quality rather than quantity.

Inevitably in a rapidly expanding service it was necessary to recruit new and experienced staff in large numbers and to promote staff to posts of responsibility before they were fully prepared. In a six-year period the number of field social workers more than doubled and the proportion of social workers now qualified has just reached 40%. The proportion of residential and day care staff with an appropriate qualification is still considerably less than 10%. The present respite from massive expansion has provided an opportunity for departments to review staffing structures, to improve staff supervision and to ensure the efficient deployment of resources generally, as well as attend to the training needs of staff. It may be argued that what is lost by the delay in developing new services at this time will be made up by improved performance within existing resources.

For many departments 1976/7 has been the first year in which it has been necessary to plan for a reduction in services to the public—something which is both politically and professionally difficult to justify. At the same time, the national economic situation has led to rising teenage unemployment and therefore more delinquency and a greater demand for services. Physically and mentally handicapped employees are among the first to be affected by redundancies and so are women, many of whom are lone mothers who rely on their earnings to support themselves. These vulnerable groups are likely to turn in increasing numbers to Social Services Departments for assistance. Cutbacks in industrial production spell special problems for workshops and centres for the handicapped which depend on industry for orders and sales. Thus services are being reduced at a time when real needs as well as expressed demands are increasing

There has been an unmistakable shift of emphasis in recent years from residential care to care in the community for many different client groups. It is clear that there is scope for further change and the cutback in the building programme at a time when many areas of the country are experiencing an increase in the number of elderly means that ways must be found to support more elderly people in the community who might in years gone by have expected a place in an old people's home. In the field of delinquency the expense of specialised residential provision is difficult to justify unless local authorities are prepared to spend similar sums keeping children in their own homes.

Unfortunately, changing the emphasis of social services provision is not an easy task during a period in which no increased funds are available. Expenditure might be saved in the long term if the Home Help Service could be expanded, if more day centres could be opened and if the provision of more and better foster care for children could be established. The White Paper "Better Services for the Mentally Ill" drew attention to the problem of promoting change within restricted budgets; indicating the advantages of transferring mental patients from expensive in-patient treatment to community services the White Paper observed "but the savings and expenditure are not always simultaneous". The pace of development is determined largely by the additional funds immediately available rather than by the sums that can be saved. The present freeze on new expenditure not only prevents a much desired growth in services but affects the rate at which services can change. Static services in a changing world represent a waste of resources.

The emergence of a generic qualifying certificate (the Certificate of Qualification in Social Work) has been accompanied by the demise of courses offering specialist training to social workers. Sub-disciplines such as medical and psychiatric social work have suffered from an almost complete disappearance of specialist courses, together with a reduction of specialist input in "elective" options.

There is a growing tendency for social work tutors to be drawn from social scientists with purely academic backgrounds which in turn influences curriculum content and the balance between field experience and classroom learning. Faced with the very wide responsibilities of Social Services Departments and the growing demand for more and better services in respect of every client group, there is a danger of training courses retreating into a stance in which generalised comment and sociological theory replace the development of social work skills and perceptions. Social work education must have wider objectives than the provision of skills for social work practitioners, but the erosion of basic skills and knowledge from many social work courses is a matter of mounting concern.

Few local authority departments invest as much in staff training as Social Services Departments. In the past this has been a reflection of the extent to which professional social work training occurs subsequent to practical experience. Anxieties about the appropriateness of professional social work training courses has accelerated the trend for Social Services Departments to develop extensive in-service training programmes and it is clear that training sections in Social Services Departments have an important part to play in stimulating new development and new ideas.

PERSONAL SOCIAL SERVICES COUNCIL

Brook Hse., 2–16 Torrington Pl., London, WC1E 7HN (01-323 4757); Secretary and Chief Officer: R. T. Clarke, OBE, MA, JP.

The Council owes its origin to recommendations in the Seebohm Committee's report on the reorganization of the social services, that a single council should be established to advise Ministers on the development of the personal social services. The Council's secretariat started working in March 1974.

The Council is an independent body with advisory, research and development functions; it assumed responsibilities formerly undertaken by the advisory councils concerned with child care and physical disability. Funds are provided jointly by central government and the local authorities. Members, formally appointed by Ministers, are drawn from local authorities, public bodies, the professions, the voluntary movement, and the academic world. A number of working groups have been established to consider the following matters: principles of residential care, 'consumer participation' in the social services, complaints procedures, manpower needs and resources in the voluntary sector, information needs in the social services, children and family life (currently considering intermediate treatment and criteria for the approval of independent adoption agencies under the Children Act 1975), collaboration between services in the provision of community care, priorities in expenditure decision-making in social services departments. The Council is involved in the DHSS Advisory Committee on Alcoholism, the DHSS Manpower and Training Group, a joint DHSS/DES enquiry into truancy and violence in schools, a DES working group on the influence of sex education and other social influences on the sexual behaviour of young people. It has a nominee on the DHSS National Development Group for the Mentally Handicapped.

In its research programme, the Council's function is to disseminate information about the implications of researchand help co-ordinate research efforts in this field, rather than to conduct in-depth research projects. Studies have been commissioned on: staffing problems in residential care, sheltered employment for people in residential institutions, the management of public expenditure, the homeless single, variations in levels of expenditure on health and personal social services. A review of literature and the policy issues in domestic violence and a review of literature and practice in community care are also under way, as well as a literature review of the definition and measurement of 'quality of care' in residential institutions.

CENTRAL COUNCIL FOR EDUCATION AND TRAINING IN SOCIAL WORK

The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work which came into being on 1 October 1971 is an independent statutory body responsible for the promotion of social work training throughout the United Kingdom. It took over the training functions formerly undertaken by the Central Council for Training in Child Care, the Training and Education Committee of the Advisory Council for Probation and After Care and the Council for Training in Social Work. It is concerned not only with training in social work for the local authority social services and associated voluntary services, but also for social work in the hospital and education services and in the probation and after care services. Within this broad field it promotes training and recognized courses leading to social work qualifications. CCETSW is also providing a new form of training for a wide range of staffs in the social services other than social workers, leading to the Certificate in Social Service. Pending the introduction of the CSS in day services over the next five years, the Council also recognizes courses leading to awards for teachers of mentally handicapped adults. It is unable to make grants for the provision of courses or to support students.

£1 for 84p? This is an offer no one can refuse. This bargain has been snapped up by County and District Councils who have a central purchasing organization or who share in the operation of such an organization. But there are other Councils who have, so far, neglected to avail themselves of this offer. Generalized criticism, which is very prevalent at this time, of the efficiency or extravagance of local government is very unfair, but the finger can certainly be pointed at Councils who do not seek the benefits of central purchasing.

Looking back over the last fifteen years, there has never been a time when there was no boost to the extension of central purchasing in local authorities; the research study on Central Purchasing published in 1963 by the then Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants; the White Paper issued in May, 1967 entitled "Public Purchasing and Industrial Efficiency"; the formation of the Joint Review Body on Local Authority Purchasing in 1967; the real breakthrough with the passing of the Local Authorities (Goods and Services) Act 1970—a measure that had been sought for many years—and the circular which followed; the setting up of the Joint Advisory Committee on Local Authority Purchasing (JACLAP) in 1970 also; a survey, also published in that year, by the Local Government Operational Research Unit under the title "Does Central Purchasing Pay?", of the purchasing of ninety-seven local authorities; all these and one economic crisis after another, each stated to be the worst since the war. It is surprising, nay astounding, that there are still some Councils who do not want £1 for 84p.

JACLAP, which has made valiant efforts in this field over the six years of its existence by means of advice and recommendations, publications, regional meetings, training courses for supplies personnel and reports to the local authority Associations, has made a review of its impact and activities. A Memorandum, entitled "The Way Ahead", has been produced (November 1975) for submission to the Associations. It states that during JACLAP'S existence "a fundamental reorganization of local government structures has taken place, accompanied by a substantial shift towards corporate management, all this in the context of a growing financial crisis. Never has the need for sound and economic procurement policies amongst local authorities been more apparent. Despite these factors, purchasing in some authorities continues to be carried out in an unco-ordinated and unsystematic manner, failing to achieve the economies obtainable for a wise exploitation of the authority's purchasing power." Following local government reorganization, JACLAP was re-constituted with the same terms of reference, namely:

"1. Advice on contracts, pricing, demand and supply;
2. The function of a clearing-house for purchasing arrangements and specialist knowledge;
3. Liaison for national or regional purchasing and supply schemes; and
4. Liaison between local authorities and Government departments on purchasing arrangements."

The Memorandum points out that "if some authorities have not yet fully accepted the need for a co-ordinated approach to purchasing, some others have established purchasing organizations on a restrictive basis, whereby they are precluded from providing an effective service to the whole authority and are liable because of this to give the concept of co-ordinated purchasing a bad name. JACLAP will need to continue in its activities to take account of the needs existing in these authorities." The present situation of purchasing organization in non-metropolitan county councils is broadly stated to be:—

"(a) at least 27 counties maintaining or having access (e.g. through a consortium arrangement) to a soundly based and professionally run purchasing organization which is motivated (though sometimes inadequately) to improve purchasing performance;
(b) at least 8 counties which have appointed central purchasing officers but without giving them terms of reference within which they can provide a comprehensive service to their authority as a whole;
(c) at least 11 counties without access to any central purchasing service for their departments' requirements."

and in metropolitan county councils "5 of these county areas have available to them the services of a broadly based and professionally run purchasing organization, though the scope of that organization has not been developed as yet to its fullest potential in some cases. In the remaining two metropolitan county areas, the authorities are generally continuing to purchase independently, though the possibility of the co-ordination of purchasing is actively under consideration in both cases."

JACLAP sees its first and main task to be that of "drawing the attention of policy makers in authorities that do not use the services of a co-ordinated purchasing organization to the advantages to be gained from doing so, informing them of the techniques employed and demonstrating the specific value-for-money benefits of a purposeful but sensitive approach to the management of materials, as one of the three basic factors of production in the local government as much as the industrial context. Action to this end will be directed both at authorities not employing any form of co-ordinated purchasing and at those which have set it up in an inadequate form, though the approach may differ in some respects as between one group and the other." The second main area of need is "to give all possible assistance, support and guidance to those responsible for co-ordinated purchasing in local authorities, and particularly those in which the function is newly established and does not have a basic organization on which to build, or is liable to encounter ingrained resistance from potential user departments."

In order to meet the above needs, six principal lines of approach are set out, the fundamental need being to have up-to-date knowledge of the way in which each local authority carries out its purchasing and the extent of the services provided by each purchasing organization. At present, the work of JACLAP is carried out by part-time officers of AMA, JACLAP having no budget of its own. Agreement is being sought for the appointment of full-time officers paid for by the local authority Associations and having back-up facilities of common office services. As JACLAP points out, the costs of such a secretariat should be recouped many times over in the improvements in efficiency to be achieved in local authorities' procurement expenditure at present estimated to be in the region of £3,000 million per annum. It is to be hoped that this further initiative by JACLAP in its role of encouragement and persuasion will result in the success it undoubtedly deserves.

JOINT ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON LOCAL AUTHORITY PURCHASING (JACLAP)

Chairman: County Coun. Group Capt. F. A. Willan, CBE, DFC, MA, DL

Address: 36 Old Queen Street, London, SW1H 9JE (01-930 9861).

The Joint Advisory Committee on Local Authority Purchasing was set up by agreement between the local authority Associations in July 1970, in response to recommendations made by the Joint Review Body on Local Authority Purchasing (HMSO, 1968), with the basic aim of promoting efficient purchasing by local authorities. Its terms of reference are: To advise on contracts, pricing, demand and supply; to provide a clearing house for purchasing arrangements and specialist knowledge; to liaise for national or regional purchasing or supply schemes; to facilitate liaison between local authorities and Government Departments on purchasing arrangements.

The Committee comprises elected member and officer representatives appointed by the Association of County Councils, the Association of District Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, with a group of officer advisers representing the major local government professions and assessors from the Department of the Environment and the District Audit Service. Following local government reorganization in Scotland, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities is also represented on the Committee. Detailed work is carried out by technical officer panels and the Committee has collaborated closely with the Local Government Training Board over the issue of Training Recommendation No. 13 "Supplies Personnel" and the organization of post-entry training courses. JACLAP issues progress reports to local authorities following its quarterly meetings and also publishes memoranda from time to time on particular subjects of interest in the purchasing field.

Review by M. P. Collins, B.A., Dip.T.P., F.R.T.P.I.

Senior Lecturer in Town Planning, University College, London

Perhaps the most far reaching event in 1975, so far as planning is concerned, took place on 12 November when the Royal Assent was given to the Community Land Bill. This Bill was criticized severely by the Conservative Party and by such august bodies as the Law Society, the Royal Town Planning Institute, the Town and Country Planning Association, the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors, and by several property development associations. In essence, the main grounds for complaint included the scope for corruption, the impedance of private house construction, the lack of public accountability at a local public inquiry, the extensive supervisory powers enjoyed by the Secretary of State for the Environment, the inadequate safeguards for good planning, the availability of simpler forms of taxation to recoup betterment, and the cost of implementing the new concept of Land Acquisition and Management Schemes. The Rt. Hon. John Silkin M.P. made it clear that the Bill was based ". . . upon a deeper philosophy than the politics of consensus. So far from denying its radical principles, I take pride in them." In view of all these criticisms it is interesting to note that the British Property Federation has expressed a willingness to co-operate with the Government and local authorities in making this Act work. The Federation has criticized the Conservative Party's pledges to repeal the Act, arguing that an all party approach is needed. Likewise, the president of the R.I.C.S. has warned of the damage to the development and construction industries which would result if the Act were materially altered or repealed. In the last resort, one is forced to agree with the views of the Director of the T.C.P.A. viz: "That if it is not to be repealed by a future government its provisions must therefore gain popular acceptance in a relatively short time. It will be judged according to its producing a better environment than we have now and according to its fairness and openness of operation."

The newly constituted Commission for Local Administration in England received over 473 complaints about maladministration by local councils in 1975. Although numerous complaints were made about noise, public nuisances, and the problems arising from land acquisition and redevelopment, the majority of complainants alleged that local councils had failed to observe statutory planning procedures. This, perhaps, confirms the wisdom of the R.T.P.I.'s decision to take part in the development of planning aid services. The Institute is to encourage its members to provide free planning advice to those people who may suffer from planning decisions, and cannot afford to pay for normal professional advice. Discussions will be held with local authority associations about the special position of local authority planners to ensure that there will be no conflict of interest with their official duties. Although it may prove necessary to introduce special safeguards in this respect, the Institute hopes that local authorities will encourage their staff to man planning aid centres. At long last the Institute appears to have accepted the fact that it has an important role to play in advising the community, in addition to protecting the vested interests of its members.

The traditional calm and orderly behaviour that one associates with local public inquiries has been singularly absent at the inquiries which were instituted to examine the merits of motorway proposals in Essex, Airedale and Cornwall. Vigorous attempts have been made to question the legality of these proceedings on the grounds that the Department of the Environment failed to publish, in local newspapers, notices setting out the environmental impact of these proposed motorways. The Department's decision to instruct its officials not to answer questions on the methodology for predicting traffic flows can only make matters worse. This decision appears to run counter to the recommendation of the House of Commons Expenditure Committee which stated that objectors at local public inquiries should have the right to challenge the need for a road scheme.

Mr. Crosland, when Secretary of State for the Environment, refused permission for a new inner ring road at York until every other possibility has been explored. This decision confirms that the Government is edging perceptibly towards a policy of traffic restraint coupled with some improvement of public transport. Less than three years ago after a local public inquiry, the Inspector described the proposed inner ring road as "essential for the well being of the city centre and its conservation." The Statement by the Secretary of State for the Environment on the Greater London Plan also confirms that the Government favours a shift of emphasis towards the improvement of public transport. In view of this policy, it is not surprising that the Government agrees that Ringway 1 and the southern section of Ringway 2 from the M4 at Chiswick to the A20 at Mottingham should be deleted from the G.L.D.P., having regard to the attendant heavy loss of housing and environmental damage. The case for an all purpose North Circular Road is, however, accepted. The future of the Outer Orbital Road around London must now be in doubt, notwithstanding the fact that some 20 miles of the route are now under construction, and that the route for a further 30 miles has been confirmed. Work on the 'key section' around N.E. London, which is intended to carry Midlands traffic to the docks, is likely to be affected by the current cut-back in Government spending. The economic, social and environmental consequences of this 'stop-go-stop' approach to road construction need urgent investigation, in view of the parlous financial position of public transport, increasing congestion and road accidents, and the need to divert heavy flows of traffic away from literally hundreds of towns and villages. The strength of public opinion can perhaps be gauged from recent events in Nottingham, where the City's controversial traffic control system, which uses a combination of traffic lights and street barriers to allow buses rather than cars into the city centre, has aroused such hostility among local people that its future is in doubt.

A report published by the Canning Town Community Development Project has drawn attentions, yet again, to the large-scale movement of firms away from the older industrial areas to 'green fields' sites all over the country. There can be little doubt that the Government's regional economic planning policies are partly to blame for the loss of some 17,800 jobs from Canning Town since 1966. A particularly worrying aspect of this decline is the fact that it is taking place at twice the rate at which people are leaving the locality. The remaining resident population is virtually tied to the area by the security of council housing while the poor public transport facilities make commuting difficult, time-consuming and expensive. As a result of the recent decline of the London Docks, and its associated heavy processing industries, the community is being forced to act as a supplier of low-wage service sector workers. It is estimated that five firms now control over half of the remaining industrial jobs in the area. As these firms belong to large international combines, there exists the very real danger that the economics of plant rationalization, combined with the financial incentives associated with the Development Areas, may result in a further exodus of jobs. This is truly an ironic situation with parts of inner London experiencing unemployment levels of between 11% and 13% which would warrant development area status elsewhere in the country.

It is hardly surprising, therefore, that numerous criticisms have been levelled at the Government's decision not to allocate special funds for the provision of new infrastructure to facilitate the redevelopment of London's Docklands. The revitalization of this area appears to be one of the first casualties of Government spending cuts. This decision calls into question Trammel Crow's proposal to redevelop 153 acres of Dockland to provide a Merchandise Mart. The G.L.C. estimates that it will cost over £9.5 million to effect necessary improvements to the approach roads to the Merchandise Mart. It is understood that the proposals for improving public transport facilities in the 5,567-acre Docklands Area will now have to compete with other priorities in London and the rest of the country. Without better transport services the housing, employment and recreational facilities which are earmarked for this area will remain isolated and unattractive. In view of the exodus of manufacturing industry and the resultant high levels of unemployment noted previously, one must question the wisdom of current Government thinking, especially the decision not to offer any special concessions to attract new industry into the area. The Government's 'touching faith' in the efficacy of retraining programmes is hard to comprehend if the only alternative form of employment will be low-wage jobs in the service sector. The explanation for this unsympathetic approach to London's problems lies in a recent Government statement which confirmed that political judgment will continue to play an important part in future decisions about regional economic planning policy. When presenting their observations on the Second Report of the Expenditure Committee on 'Regional Development Incentives' the Government argued that "the political interest in regional policy is strong and clear, particularly in the disadvantaged regions." This suggests that the various economic planning regions in England will have to fight even harder to secure additional Government assistance in the future, and it adds a new dimension to the current debate on regional devolution. One possible outcome is the Northern Region's decision to produce detailed figures on how much public money is spent on each region. Although the main aim is to ensure that available resources are put to the most beneficial use within the region, interest will no doubt focus upon the apportionment of Government investment between the regions.

The Government has taken steps to plug a 'loophole' in planning legislation which has allowed cash-and-carry warehouses to be opened on a large number of industrial trading estates. Local authorities have been advised that planning permission should not be granted for warehouse development if the main purpose of the building is the sale of goods which are carried away. This ruling, if rigorously applied, could have an adverse effect on the competitiveness of small retailers who rely upon cash-and-carry warehouses for cut-price stock. The major suppliers of consumer goods prefer the cash-and-carry system of wholesale distribution because of the high cost of individual deliveries to small shops. There can be little doubt, however, that some cash-and-carry warehouses have become 'thinly-disguised' retail stores which compete very successfully with neighbouring traditional shopping centres. In view of the above, it is interesting to note that the Secretary of State for the Environment decided not to support Enfield Borough Council's objection to the use of 75,000 square feet of warehousing, adjacent to the North Circular Road, as a retail outlet. Understandably, and perhaps as a result of this decision, Queensway Warehouses (Norfolk Ltd.) intend to establish an additional twenty 'edge-of-town' retail warehouse outlets ranging in size from 10,000 to 75,000 square feet. The edge-of-town shopping centre debate received yet another airing at a public inquiry into J. S. Sainsbury's proposal to build a 46,000 square feet supermarket, with a petrol filling station and parking space for 425 cars, on a five acre site at Warndon on the outskirts of Worcester. This proposal is opposed by Worcester City Council, Worcester and Hereford County Council, and Droitwich Town Development Corporation on economic, traffic and amenity grounds. Once again the main area of debate concerns the impact of the proposed supermarket upon the retail trade of existing neighbouring shopping centres. The vagueries of the outcome of this debate were confirmed when the Secretary of State for the Environment refused planning permission for Town and City's proposed out-of-town shopping centre at Stonebridge, Solihull. At the time of writing, the Secretary of State has refused planning permission for at least 22 out-of-town shopping centres and approved 6 schemes.

Mr. Victor Lucas, President of the British Property Federation, has critized the Government's attitude towards property development because it has resulted in the abandonment of several important town centre projects. The £10 million redevelopment scheme for North Shields Town Centre is still no nearer implementation than it was when the original plans were drawn up in the late 1940's. Financial difficulties have prevented both the Council and the Developers from going ahead with an ambitious scheme to provide new shops, offices, leisure facilities and a bus/rapid transport station. A scheme to redevelop the centre of Cardiff has been abandoned because of rising costs. Six years ago the estimated cost of providing new shops, offices, leisure facilities, flats and car-parks was £47 million, now it would cost at least £126 million. Ravenseft Ltd., the developers, have agreed to pay £3 million compensation to the Council in installments of £500,000 every six months. Some of this money will be used to compensate the businesses which have already moved out of the town centre to make way for redevelopment. Cardiff City Council now hope that a new consortium of developers and retailers will be able to undertake the redevelopment of two of the four priority sites in the middle of the comprehensive development area. Marks and Spencer, Boots, and Woolworths have all expressed interest in taking up part of the 500,000 square feet of new retail floor-space which is to be provided on an eight acre site bounded by Queen Street, Working Street, Hills Terrace and Charles Street. Ravenseft Ltd., who were previously committed to the redevelopment of the Cardiff shopping centre, have also abandoned their plans for a £20 million town centre redevelopment scheme at Brixton in Lambeth. Conversely, a £12 million development scheme for central Taunton is still scheduled to commence in about two years' time. This scheme envisages the redevelopment of a six acre site, close to the existing town centre, to provide a covered air-conditioned shopping complex on two levels with parking for 600 cars.

The Government's views on the function and purpose of New Towns were outlined in a consultative document which placed particular emphasis on the provision of rented housing, a halt to the further sale of houses to tenants, and closer co-operation between development corporations and local councils. Priority in the allocation of housing tenancies is still to be given to people moving from the cities, and to people nominated by businesses that have to recruit workers. New Town Corporations will be expected, however, to pay special attention to helping people living in conditions of housing stress. Although the Corporations will still be empowered to build houses for sale and to designate land for private development, particular consideration is to be given to the provision of low-cost housing for owner-occupation. This marks a departure from the Conservative Government's policy which sought to achieve a 'balance' between public and private accommodation. The Chairman of the New Town Corporations in England and Wales, on the other hand, want the Government to relax these prohibitions insofar as they relate to the sale of homes to sitting tenants. Likewise, the New Towns Association has served warning of the dangers of over-concentrating upon houses to rent. Particular attention needs to be given to the relationship between economic and social objectives, and the resultant character of the housing programme, especially if an attempt is to be made to 'blur' the physical and social demarcation between rented and owner-occupied dwellings. Skelmersdale New Town, which is intended to play a key role in revitalizing the economy of the North West Region, is itself experiencing an unemployment level of 8.8%, i.e. twice the national average. The town's fundamental problem appears to lie in its dependence upon three or four large industrial firms which are themselves experiencing considerable financial problems due to the present recession.

The Secretary of State for the Environment has confirmed several important additions to the nation's approved and interim Green Belts. Some 96.7 square miles of land around the City of Oxford have been given the status of approved Green Belt, in an attempt to preserve the character of Oxford and to control its outward spread. The precise inner boundaries of this Green Belt will not be finalized, however, until the structure plan for Oxford is completed. Similar Green Belt proposals for the counties of Hereford/Worcester, Staffordshire and West Midlands have also been approved. This means that some 500 square miles of land within the West Midlands Region have been designated as approved Green Belt, while a further 250 square miles have been accorded interim Green Belt status pending a final decision in the light of future plans for the region. An additional 40 square miles of land in North East Derbyshire, around Chesterfield and Bolsover, have also been accorded interim Green Belt status to restrict further urban growth to the areas thus identified in the development plan.

Essex County Council has expressed concern at the release of Green Belt land for housing as a result of recent planning appeals to the Secretary of State for the Environment. During the last 18 months some 164 acres of land have been thus released on appeal, and the Council consider that a further 325 acres may have been 'put at risk' as a result of these appeal decisions. In a written reply to a question in the House of Commons, Mr. John Silkin confirmed that local ahthorities in the South East Region have so far identified 950 acres of land within the approved Metropolitan Green Belt which they are prepared to release for housing. This exercise has been carried out in response to the Government's suggestion that some 2,000 acres of land within the Metropolitan Green Belt might be released for housing without damage to the basic Green Belt policy. In view of the above it is hardly surprising that the Council for the Preservation of Rural England argues that local authorities in the South East are granting planning permissions which are resulting in the loss of valuable agricultural land and the destruction of precious landscapes. The population in the Chilterns, for example, has increased by 17,000 between 1966 and 1973, compared with the Strategic Plan for the South East's proposed increase of 16,000 by 1981. Similar departures from the predicted increases set out in the S.P.S.E. have occurred at Uckfield.

The Secretary of State for the Environment has approved the Warwickshire and Worcestershire Structure Plans subject to some modifications and reservations. He directed that the Warwickshire, West Midlands and Hereford/Worcestershire County Councils should submit proposals for alterations to their strategic transport policies, notably in respect of the provision of public transport facilities. In this context it is worth noting that the leader of the West Midlands County Council, Councillor S. Yapp, has suggested that the Government should virtually ignore the six structure plans which have been prepared by the former Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Warley, West Bromwich, Dudley and Walsall Councils because these plans are so hopelessly out-of-date as to be irrelevant. Councillor Yapp argues that ". . . it would be better if we started with the County's own structure plan." This must give cause for concern, bearing in mind that these six structure plans took several years to produce at a cost of several hundred thousand pounds. Public participation, let alone confidence, in the new system of development plans will not be forthcoming if this state of affairs continues. Already, numerous writers and public bodies have questioned the need for structure plans. Many District Planning Authorities have confirmed that the present generation of structure plans provide little help in respect of day-to-day development control problems, and contain insufficient detail to facilitate the preparation of local plans.

The Final Report produced by George Dobry Q.C. sets out a wide range of proposals to improve the operation of the present system of development control. A particularly important recommendation entails the division of all planning applications into either Class A (where the development is relatively minor and/or complies with the provisions of an up-to-date development plan), or Class B (where the development is more complex and controversial). This 238 page report sets out a variety of proposals to improve the present operation of development control powers—notably, in respect of the standardization of procedures for dealing with planning applications, the enforcement time-limits for consultations, compulsory site notices and/or neighbour notification in the case of Class A and Class B applications, improved consultation between the developer and the local planning authority to avoid wasted time in the event of a subsequent appeal, a considerable reduction in the amount of overlapping responsibility between County and District Planning Authorities, more frequent committee meetings to avoid planning delays, and the admission of the public to planning sub-committee meetings. Particular attention is given to the policy framework within which both the local planning authorities and developers operate. The case for and against greater public participation in development control receives a thorough examination. The Report highlights the need for earlier consultation on all planning applications, easier access to the statutory register, more published information on each local authority's planning procedures, to enable the public, and amenity societies, to play a more active role.

The Government has already rejected two of the Report's major proposals, viz, to divide all planning applications into two classes (Class A and Class B) and to impose a statutory time limit for decisions on all applications This latter proposal is rejected on the grounds that ". . . while a statutory timetable coupled with deemed consent might help to accelerate decisions of a sort, it opens the door for hasty and ill-considered decisions and for precautionary refusals, leading to further time consumed on appeal." Likewise, the proposal that there should be more publicity for planning applications is also rejected. The D.o.E.'s chief planner, Mr. Wilfred Burns, claims that over one half of the Report's 100 proposals have been accepted, without conceding the rigid approach adopted by George Dobry, Q.C. Perhaps the last word should be accorded to George Dobry who concludes that "it is not so much the system which is wrong, but the way it is used. The successful implementation of the proposed measures depends upon a change of attitude towards a more constructive approach on all sides."

Mr. Eric Lyons, in his presidential address to the Royal Institute of British Architects, argued that "the ever-increasing flow of legislation and directives and the planning situation makes the exercise of our skill almost impossible. Any architectural success is in spite of the controls of one sort or another, and we have the extraordinary spectacle of official design guides which must, in time, become mandatory design requirements. The drift towards totalitarianism is most disturbing." Others see the advent of design guides as a means of improving the quality of the local environment, especially the design and appearance of the housing schemes prepared by small building firms who cannot afford to employ the services of qualified architects. Those engaged in house extension have also welcomed the clear cut advice contained in design guides.

Mr. Reginald Freeson, Minister of Housing, told the annual conference of the National Housing and Town Planning Council that residential densities should not exceed 70 persons per acre instead of the 100 to 150 p.p.a. which is currently being achieved in the conurbations. He also suggested that houses could be built more quickly and cheaply, with a better environment, than the flats which now dominate the inner urban areas. Birmingham City Council have announced their intention to launch an experiment in joint home ownership, with the City Council and a new category of 'owner-tenants' each possessing a 50% equity stake in the house. The 'owner-tenants' will pay rent to the Corporation on the Council's half-interest and will be afforded an opportunity to buy out the Council's share after five years. It is envisaged that this new scheme will apply initially to some 639 houses currently under construction. Manchester City Council appear to be re-evaluating the design principles which were observed in their Ardwick, Moss Side and Beswick Estates. Widespread criticism of, and complaints about, the concept of upper-level deck access has led the Council to prepare a £1;3 million plan to limit movements along the deck and increase privacy and security. The Chairman of the City's Housing Committee claims that these proposed alterations will "destroy the deck access concept" which purported to recreate the terraced streets that the tower blocks replaced. No doubt housing architects, and the committees they advise, will eventually appreciate the need to create an urban environment which satisfies the needs and prejudices of the tenants and, perhaps, eventual owners.

The Government has authorized a further three sites in Scotland for the construction of production platforms for the exploitation of off-shore oil deposits. Mr. Ross, when Secretary of State for Scotland, granted planning permission for three construction yards to be developed at Macringan's Point Campbeltown, at Portavadie on Loch Fyne, and at Hunterston on the Clyde Estuary. This means that six of the seven "preferred platform designs" identified by the Department of Energy now have sites available to enable fabrication to commence. The Government will take all three sites into public ownership to ensure that there is no delay in development. State ownership, so it is argued, will also enable the Government to exercise firm control over the future re-instatement of these sites. The Highlands Development Board has commissioned a £50,000 study of the pressures placed on recreational facilities by the influx of the population which will be attracted by oil-related industry. This study will pay particular attention to the impact of these pressures on recreational facilities in the Moray Firth, Shetland, South Argyll, Lewis, Orkney and Loch Carron areas. Underlying this study is a widespread concern about the social effects of the recent developments which have accompanied the discovery and exploit ation of off-shore oil deposits.

THE ECONOMIC PLANNING MACHINERY IN THE ENGLISH REGIONS

The Secretary of State for the Environment has the leading responsibility for the Government's regional policy. As part of his functions in this field he is responsible for the Regional Economic Planning Councils and Economic Planning Boards in England. Within his Department, the Minister for Planning and Local Government and Development is the Minister who deals with the affairs of the Councils and Boards.

In England there are eight economic planning regions: Northern, Yorkshire and Humberside, East Midlands, East Anglia, South East, South West, West Midlands and North West. There are an Economic Planning Council and an Economic Planning Board in each region. (Scotland also has an Economic Council and an Economic Planning Board; there is a Welsh Council and a Welsh Planning Board; and Northern Ireland has an Economic Council.)

The Planning Councils

Each Economic Planning Council in England has some thirty part-time members who are appointed by the Secretary of State as individuals with a wide knowledge and experience of their region. Businessmen, trade unionists and members or officers of local authorities make up the majority of the members; the rest are drawn from the universities, social services, agriculture, and other interests in the regions.

The Economic Planning Councils are advisory bodies, with no executive functions. They collaborate with regional groups of local planning authorities and with central government in the preparation of broad economic and land-use strategies which will provide a regional framework for national and local planning and investment decisions. They also advise on the regional implications of national policies and developments.

The Planning Boards

The Economic Planning Boards consist of senior officials in the regions of the Government Departments concerned with the various aspects of regional planning.

The main tasks of the Economic Planning Boards are to co-ordinate the regional policies and planning work of Departments and to work with the Economic Planning Councils in their work on their planning strategies for the regions by providing them with information and advice.

Co-ordination

Co-ordination of the regional planning work of Government Departments is made easier by housing the regional planning staffs of the various Departments in the same building or in close proximity. In each regional office there is a secretariat and a research section serving both the Council and the Board.

There is continuing close consultation between the regions, mainly through periodic meetings of the Chairmen of the Councils and Boards.

SCOTLAND, WALES AND NORTHERN IRELAND

The Scottish Economic Council is appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland, who is also its chairman. An Under Secretary, who is also the Chief Economic Adviser to the Scottish Office, acts as chairman of the Economic Planning Board for Scotland. The Council has terms of reference similar to the English Councils and the Planning Board combines representatives of the main Departments concerned with the planning of economic development in Scotland.

In Wales there is a Welsh Council with somewhat wider terms of reference than the Regional Economic Planning Councils in England and the Scottish Economic Council. The Chairman and members of the Welsh Council are appointed by the Secretary of State for Wales and the Chairman of the Welsh Planning Board is an Under Secretary at the Welsh Office.

Northern Ireland is a special case amongst the regions of the UK because of the particular constitutional relationship which it has had with Westminster.

In December 1964, the Northern Ireland Economic Council was established as a non-statutory advisory body. The current membership consists of representatives drawn from both sides of industry together with independent members.

The members are part-time and under the present constitutional arrangements the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, The Rt Hon Merlyn Rees is Chairman and Minister of State, The Rt Hon Stanley Orme is Vice-Chairman.

The Council's terms of reference are to consider and recommend on means of furthering, including the planning of, the economic development of Northern Ireland with particular reference to the provision of employment, the promotion of economic growth and improved efficiency'.

PLANNING IN THE GREATER LONDON AREA

The GLC is the strategic planning authority for Greater London as a whole. Working closely with the 32 London Boroughs and the City Corporation, the GLC plans the overall policies and framework for its own actions and the actions of the many private and public agencies which together serve a population of 7·1 million—roughly one-seventh of the total population of England and Wales—in an area of 610 square miles.

The GLC is responsible for the Greater London Development Plan, submitted in 1969, which was the subject of a public inquiry by an independent panel. The Government's proposed modifications were published in December 1975. Between these dates the GLC's policies continued to evolve in several spheres—notably transport, housing and employment (both industrial and office). However, the basic objectives remain the same—to provide for the Londoner and his family an adequately sized home set in an acceptable environment; a choice of jobs within easy reach of home; accessible facilities for education, recreation, social services, etc.; an ability to move about easily and safely on foot, by public transport, and by the reasonable use of the car; and an opportunity to participate in creating an environment which will attain the requirements of civilized living.

To achieve these objectives the GLC works in close co-operation with the many interests involved, including trade unions, employers' organizations, transport undertakings, etc., as well as the borough councils and government departments. To supplement the statutory planning machinery, the GLC also publishes topic papers and issues policy statements whenever necessary.

The Borough Councils are the planning authorities in their own areas. They have, however, to refer certain applications to the GLC for planning permission. These include applications having more than just local significance, e.g. large concert halls, stadia, university buildings, airports or London termini, and also those for developments within the GLC's own comprehensive development areas. The Borough Councils deal with the remainder themselves but seek the GLC's direction on applications for major shopping developments, high buildings, substantial office or industrial development, development in the Green Belt, works to buildings of architectural or historic interest, departures from the Initial Development Plan, and proposals which might affect a GLC road or its responsibilities for traffic and transport.

Although plans for most of the major local centres are prepared by the borough councils, the GLC is involved in larger development schemes, such as Thamesmead and Covent Garden, and the 8½ square miles of the London Docklands, where following extensive public consultation, a Joint Committee comprising representatives from the GLC and the five boroughs concerned has been set up to prepare a strategy for the development of this area.

CENTRE FOR ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

The Centre for Environmental Studies is an independent research body charged with the furtherance and dissemination of research into problems connected with urban and regional planning. It was created in 1967. Financial support of some £480,000 p.a. is provided by the Department of the Environment, plus specific project commissions. The Ford Foundation has made its second basic grant for five years ($450 000), but this has been allocated. Further support comes from other Trusts and Foundations. By the beginning of 1976 the Centre had sponsored over fifty projects in some twenty universities and institutions in Britain. There is also a central research team in London. CES acts as a focal point for the collection and dissemination of research work on planning in Britain. Study groups conferences and seminars are a central part of the work. A Fellowships scheme is available for practising planners. A 'Planning Exchange' has been established in Glasgow. Over one hundred research and conference papers have already been published in one of the four series of CES publications and a number of books relating to work already completed are published in a joint CES HEB series. Annual Reports and News Sheets are available free. There is a mailing list.

The Chairman of the Governing Body is Lord Llewelyn-Davies. The Vice Chairman is Sir Frank Marshall. There are up to fifteen Governors. The Director is Professor Christopher Foster, and the Secretary is Rowland Eustace, 62 Chandos Pl., London, WC2N 4HH. (01-240 3424).

Review by D. J. KINNERSLEY

Senior Economic Adviser, National Water Council

The Year Book last carried a review article in this Section in late 1973, since when a lot of water has flowed under a great many bridges. This review now cannot hope to fill the gap, and is bound to be more than usually a personal view. The only people with enough time to attempt full-scale descriptions of our reorganization seem to be visitors from overseas who are much impressed with it.

Organization

The new water authorities had less than nine months from the passing of the Water Act in July 1973 before becoming fully operational at the beginning of April 1974. They were given the Ogden Pocket Guide-Book on the way to form their organizations, and it is a tribute to the value of what Sir George and his colleagues suggested that managerial teams were so readily established, and the transition effectively handled. The broadly consistent functional patterns adopted by each authority have helped greatly in fostering exchanges and unified views on many new problems, and seem to have made the new authorities readily accessible to outside interests such as industry and local authorities.

Subject to variations in level according to the size and character of each authority, science was given a clearer place along with the traditional primacy of engineering and the inevitable importance of finance, and the need to provide for planning was made explicit, even if the form of this remains open to some debate. This has given a wider range of managerial perspective and a better balance than was perhaps usual or possible in the earlier setting. The new Chief Executives were drawn from a variety of professions and backgrounds, and the early death of Marshall Nixon, a former President of the Institution of Water Engineers, was a sad loss among them.

The style of corporate management which water authorities adopted certainly served well for launching large new organizations, however it may develop in future. People from all sorts of earlier units and from outside the industry have been able to contribute and to learn much very quickly, and to do so with little reserve or formality. This has been an important accompaniment for the striking sense of common purpose which authority members have generated and sustained despite the earlier controversy over constitution and membership. The success of the innovation in the governing authorities and the professional management at the same time should not cause the scale of it to be overlooked now.

Even the Ogden Committee, however, could not foresee how quickly the new patterns of divisional organization would be effectively established. Most authorities have formed multi-purpose divisions for all or parts of their area, and where this is not judged suitable, there seems no hint of the strains or separatism which might have been expected from earlier arguments. The operation now of all the industry's services in about a hundred divisions is a measure of the radical reshaping that has taken place from some 1,580 undertakings which existed up to March 1974. Perhaps the only regret is the lack of surviving documentation on them to show where savings and benefits have been gained.

The divisions generally enjoy a good deal of delegated authority from their regional headquarters, though patterns naturally vary in formal terms and in practice. The exception to this is probably most obvious in manning and recruitment, as very deliberate efforts have been made everywhere to restrain this. Estimates for 1976/77 suggest that the proportion of total costs attributable to employee costs is falling (from 24% in 1974/75 to nearer 22% in 1976/77); the increase in these costs is close to the rise in the Government index for all earnings, and there is no general evidence of extravagance in staffing. At the end of the first year, the ten authorities employed just over 58,000 people to provide all water services to the 49 million people in England and Wales. Water companies and the agency service for sewerage supplemented this, but treating everyone as benefiting from one or other of the services—pollution control and land drainage, for example, if not the more direct ones—this can be expressed as one employee for every 840 people the authorities serve.

Finance

The Act intended major changes in finance such as setting water services in the framework applying to nationalized industries and ending the substantial rate support grant that went to sewerage and sewage disposal. Inflation piled its own agonies on to the problems of transition for consumers no less than for the authority's staffs. The Jukes Committee's guidance which the authorities were given for financial matters recommended applying uniform percentage increases across regions to recover increased costs, but debiting or crediting inherited deficits or surpluses to the relevant areas. There was certainly no time to examine alternatives, and information was so limited and the local incidence of increased charges so diverse that it was a remarkable out-turn, the more so amid developing inflation, that in the first year six authorities achieved modest surpluses, four modest losses, and the overall balance was a margin of 1·3%—about £8 million—over expenditure of £620 million.

For 1975–76, the second financial year, there was more time to consider ways of dealing with the large amount of inflation still to be borne. The general pattern was an increase of water supply costs of just under 41%, and of just over 39% for sewage disposal, sewerage and general services. A major cross-section of water companies showed a 40% increase also, suggesting that the process of reorganization was not itself pushing up costs in water authorities. Rebates were introduced by the Government for domestic properties not connected to sewers, which cost about £10 million and added some 2% to the general service charge, but this turned out to be a flea-bite compared to the effort and £60 million which later had to be put into making refunds for properties without sewerage following the Daymond case and the Water Charges Act 1976.

A significant change was the extent to which for 1975–76 charges most authorities changed from applying percentage increases (which at a uniform rate bring the largest absolute increases where charges are already highest) to applying increases expressed as uniform increases in rate poundage charges. Several authorities also began schemes of equalization of charges within their region: on this, the Welsh Authority went for the grand slam of equalizing all their water supply and general services at once, and for a new basis for abstraction charges which brought very large increases to abstractors, including the Severn-Trent and North-West authorities which draw from sources in the Welsh authority area. In September 1974, the Secretary of State for Wales had already appointed a committee under Sir Goronwy Daniel to inquire into charges in the area of the Welsh Authority, and they produced a report on the basis of information then available by the following March.

By the time budgets for 1976/77 came to be prepared, inflation and interest rates were ebbing, albeit still at uncomfortably high levels, and the authorities had a much better grip on capital programmes as inherited schemes formed a smaller part of them. Between the authorities, the range of increased revenue needed for water supply was down to 9–25% and for miscellaneous services down to nil–22%. The burden of the post-Daymond refunds, however, lifted the increase in income required from connected properties to around 50% in several regions.

The publication in April 1976 of the discussion paper "Paying for Water" is another major signpost on the new track, perhaps most striking to those with longest experience of the industry. This reviews the sort of economic issues which the previous units were not obliged to face so directly in the earlier setting, and it breaks new ground perhaps in exposing the issues as much for public reaction as within the authorities. In some respects, it serves as a companion to the Government's consultation paper on the industry referred to later, but in other directions it points to the choice of furrows which the industry has to plough on the basis of understanding with its customers and on its own responsibility.

Operations

Taking over different services from so many former authorities, the inheritance of the new authorities was inevitably mixed; in the worst cases, information was as poor as physical condition, so that even finding some rural works took quite a time, and the discovery rarely a treasure. The first technical advantages of reorganization have been the greater resources of management available to recover some of the worst situations, and the opportunity to consider how, in a unified setting, schemes for investment by the previous separate units (or in some cases, hesitant consortia of them) could be reshaped with advantage. In water supply, more flexible use of resources was quickly taken up in schemes for new interconnections, and in sewage disposal existing arrangements and projects for ever-growing volumes of sludge disposal were able to be reviewed in a new context. The sewage disposal service also gained a stimulus from the early concentration of attention on trade effluent disposal and discussions with industry to rationalize the charges for this.

In a necessarily brief article, it is impossible to reflect adequately the effort that went in to carrying on work in many directions such as land drainage and pollution control effectively—and with increased efficiency—amid the stresses of organizational change. This should not go short of credit while attention tends to focus on the innovations, such as the publication by several authorities of detailed information about discharges to rivers and coastal waters, including the many unsatisfactory discharges which the authority acknowledge they make themselves from their own sewage works and outfalls. Indeed, the new authorities have, even in this early period, provided far more information about water services to the press and public than was available before, and this has taken some getting used to within the industry, the more so because the gain in public understanding can hardly be immediate.

Employee Relations and Training

On 1 April 1974, 11 employers (including the National Water Council) replaced nearly 1,600. It was an achievement in that first week to find out what all the employees should be paid and get that done. At the national level, there were settled within the first year or so, enormous assimilations of the varied conditions of service inherited from the past to a systematic basis for the new industry: it is a tribute to the industrial relations goodwill which was also passed on that this was done with so little strain, and a satisfaction to all concerned that the employers' part in it was led by Leonard Millis who had created much of that goodwill.

This is not the place to give any extended description of the employment scene in the industry or of changes such as the new superannuation arrangements. But it would be wrong to leave out the continuation of the training arrangements, and the successful adaptations made both in courses for the new setting and in the formal arrangements by which the National Water Council continues the training services for water supply in Scotland and Northern Ireland, and for water companies in England and Wales.

Central Bodies

The achievement of an effectively decentralized pattern of management, which water services certainly need in view of the part which natural and local influences must play in them, nevertheless depends on getting the right relationships with bodies at national level, where some influences need to be focussed in view of the importance of water services to all sections of the community. The Government Departments for Environment, Agriculture and Fisheries, and Wales were not necessarily to find easy the adaptations that had to be made merely because they provided so much of the early impetus. If a comparison is apt with parents of adolescent youngsters, the strains seem to have been well below average, and much of the credit should be theirs, even if it is standard practice for adolescents not to say so too openly.

The research side of the industry—including the former Water Pollution Research Laboratory of DoE and part of the Water Resources Board—was restructured into a Water Research Centre still largely in the association form of the Water Research Association also incorporated into it. While this provided very readily for the water companies and the Scottish and Northern Ireland interests to continue participating as they had done before, it was quickly evident that the 10 new authorities were bound to play a determining role—not merely because of their predominance as subscribers of income but because of their over-riding concern, in view of their large expenditure, with getting the benefits of research applied to the problems which stand out as most substantial in their activities. This has led to changes in emphasis in the research programmes already being made. However, it is hardly surprising that, when Government is putting forward a new philosophy about the industry's central agencies, the artificiality of the association form should be recognized, and proposals for the integration of the Water Research Centre should be made.

The Central Water Planning Unit—which the DoE had decided to integrate more closely within itself following dissolution of the Water Resources Board—has sought to carry on their type of work, but the change of setting has made it more difficult for them to find an effective role, notwithstanding the provision for a Steering Committee with influential representation from the industry. Here again, proposals are now being made for closer integration in the industry rather than the Department, in line with suggestions made at the time of reorganization and the Government's concern to have a national authority providing a more explicit central focus for the industry.

The new imphasis which the 1973 Act placed on the promotion of recreation by water authorities was reflected in the creation of a new and additional central body—the Water Space Amenity Commission. This has provided a useful forum for liaison at national level about recreation while water authorities have naturally been building up consultative links with local authorities and associations in their areas. The diversity of interests involved, and the general tightening of budgets have naturally prevented widespread dramatic changes, but in many places development of new opportunities is in train.

The Government Review of the Industry

In March 1976 the Government published their consultation document on the review of the industry in England and Wales. At the time of writing, before many responses have been given to them, it would be premature to indicate the general reaction. However, within the industry there is certainly a welcome for the Government's endorsement for the basic structure of substantial all-purpose authorities with boundaries founded on river catchments. There is a hope too that such changes as are to be made may be decided and implemented quickly so that uncertainty and disturbance do not hamper the gains in efficiency and new patterns of organization now developing. The customers no less than the staff find frequent change confusing and unsettling.

As to the enhanced role of a National Water Authority, it is widely recognized that someone has to provide a national context for the industry, for the sake of many outside interests as well as for Government, and there are many advantages in having the initiative and responsibility for this explicitly within the industry. In practice, this has been developing already through the trust and co-operation already established, and it is important that the debate which comes with legislation about the proposed changes should not introduce new tensions or difficulties into relationships which depend in any event on more than legislation. The spirit of equal participation in the national context, despite the varying size of the WAs, is an important ingredient in this.

Other Current Issues

It would be particularly misleading, by ending with this reference to the review, to give the impression that it is the main focus of attention in the industry at present. It is a measure of the success of the major reorganization already accomplished, and the importance of the Government's endorsement of it, that the review is causing less anxiety now it is happening than it did when it was foreshadowed.

In practice, people are more concerned with changes coming from the introduction of the Control of Pollution Act, the review of discharge consent standards and the publication of data about discharges, the quality of water supply amidst changing hazards, EEC regulations and the like. At this moment, it might not be too early to add that the ability of the reorganized industry to deal with the exceptional drought in some areas is the best practical testimony to the benefits of the change that has yet been demonstrated. No doubt all these will feature in a later review. The water industry is above all one that should never expect to be static, but it is keen that the changes that continue to be made should be those which will help it to give the most effective service to all the diverse interests which depend on it.

WATER

ENGLAND AND WALES

The Water Act, 1973 produced a far-reaching reorganization of the water industry in England and Wales with the creation of nine water authorities in England and the Welsh National Water Development Authority to be responsible for the conservation, supply and distribution of water, land drainage, the prevention of pollution, sewerage and sewage treatment and water-based recreation and amenity. These regional water authorities are also responsible for sea defences protecting low-lying land, with district councils retaining a local government responsibility for coasts protected by higher ground. The whole hydrological cycle of conservation, distribution and reclamation is unified under the management of these ten autonomous, multi-purpose water authorities, with a National Water Council, on which sit the ten regional chairmen, to give co-ordination and leadership at national level.

The ten water authorites are:

Anglian Water Authority;
Northumbrian Water Authority;
North West Water Authority;
Severn-Trent Water Authority;
Southern Water Authority;
South West Water Authority;
Thames Water Authority;
Wessex Water Authority;
Yorkshire Water Authority;
Welsh National Water Development Authority.

This structure replaced on 1st April 1974 the former 29 river authorities, 157 water undertakings and 1,393 sewerage authorities, but 29 statutory water companies remain to act as independent agents of the regional water authorities. The geographical areas of these regional water authorities are not based as hitherto on local government boundaries, but on river basins as natural water boundaries in England and Wales. The eastern boundary of the area of the Welsh National Water Development Authority does not coincide with the boundary between England and Wales in that parts of the areas of both the English Counties of Cheshire and of Hereford and Worcester are within the Development Authority's supply area and whereas parts of the area of the Welsh County of Powys are serviced by the Severn-Trent Water Authority. (See map with Regional Water Authorities in this section.)

SCOTLAND

Reorganization of local government in Scotland came into force on 16th May 1975 under the provisions of the local Government (Scotland) Act 1973. Section 148 of this Act dissolved the Regional Water Boards, established under the Water (Scotland) Act 1967, and transferred their functions to the new Regional or Islands Councils, twelve in number, created in the local government reorganization, as hereunder:

Borders Regional Council;
Central Regional Council;
Dumfries and Galloway Regional Council;
Fife Regional Council;
Grampian Regional Council;
Highland Regional Council;
Lothian Regional Council;
Strathclyde Regional Council;
Tayside Regional Council;
Western Isles Council;
Orkney Island Council;
Shetland Island Council.

There are two exceptions to the above, viz.:

(i) the whole of the former county of Kinross will come within the Regional Council of Fife.
(ii) that part of the former counties of Stirling and Dunbarton which lies within both the Strathclyde region and the region of the Mid Scotland Water Board will come within the Central Regional Council.

Also, the Central Scotland Water Development Board remained in being as a bulk supply authority serving the Central Lothian, Tayside and Strathclyde Regional Councils. The nine Regional Councils and the three Island Councils are described in detail in Section 37 devoted to Scotland and a map appears therein.

Thus reorganization of the water industry in Scotland led to the return to local authorities of responsibility for water supply, a reverse move to the changes which took place in the industry in England and Wales a year earlier from 1st April, 1974. On the other hand, the river purification boards remained in Scotland, albeit in a new guise and in a reduced number, whilst their equivalent in England and Wales, the river authorities, were dissolved in the reorganization basin.

RIVER PURIFICATION BOARDS

Section 135 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1973, established new river purification boards to take over the functions of the former river purification boards created under part II of the Rivers (Prevention of Pollution) (Scotland) Act 1951. The new boards set up by order of the Secretary of State are seven in number compared with nine former boards, and operated from 16th May 1975. They are responsible for areas known as "river purification board areas", but their boundaries do not uniformly compare with those of the nine regional local government areas on the mainland; the river purification functions in the Orkney and Shetland Islands and the Western Isles are the responsibility of the islands councils under the same Act of 1973. (See map with Scottish River Purification Boards in this Section).

As from 16th May 1975 the following seven boards are in being:

Clyde River Purification Board;
Forth River Purification Board;
Highland River Purification Board;
North East River Purification Board;
Solway River Purification Board;
Tay River Purification Board;
Tweed River Purification Board.

NORTHERN IRELAND

On 1st January 1974, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland assumed responsibilities for functions of the former Ministry of Development. In the reorganization of local government and the establishment of new district councils there on 1st October 1973, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland took over, inter alia, direct responsibility for the provision of water supplies and sewerage as opposed to the duties of the former Ministry of Development being limited to the long-term development of water resources.

These two services are now administered by the Department through four Water Services Divisions—Northern, Southern, Eastern and Western—with sub-divisions for water supply and sewerage. Previously water supply had been the responsibility of a number of water undertakings managed by specific water authorities, by some former borough councils, and by a number of urban and rural district councils.

THE NATIONAL WATER COUNCIL

1 Queen Anne's Gate, London, SW1H 9BT (01-930 3100).

Director-General: P. F. Stott.

The duties of the Council which was set up in pursuance of Section 4 of the Water Act 1973 include:

To consider and advise any Minister and the Water Authorities.

To promote and assist the efficient performance by Water Authorities of their functions including research.

To consult widely with a view to establishing a scheme for the testing and approval of water fittings throughout the United Kingdom.

To prepare, after consultation with interested parties, a scheme for training and education.

Lord Nugent of Guildford is Chairman of the Council which comprises eight other members appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales and two members appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, together with the Chairmen of the nine Regional Water Authorities for England and of the Welsh National Water Development Authority.

The names of the appointed members are as follows:

Appointments by the Secretaries of State
Lord Cooper of Stockton Heath, MA.
J. Humphries (Chairman of the Water Space Amenity Commission).
J. F. T. Langley.
L. W. F. Mills, CBE, JP, BSc(Econ).
F. W. W. Pemberton, CBE, MA, FRICS.
Sir Frank Price, DL, FSVA, FCIT.
Prof. Janet Watson, BSc, PhD.
Mrs Anne Yates, CBE, JP.

Appointments by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
C. S. R. Graham.
Sir Hugh Munro-Lucas-Tooth, Bt.

GRUNDON DISPOSAL

In a mess with pollutant wastes?

More and more municipal authorities and industrial concerns are taking advantage of the Grundon specialist waste handling facilities. Apart from the routine regular dry and liquid waste servicing a 24 hour emergency service is available, in particular for the handling and treatment of pollutant effluents. In all cases our qualified chemist would liaise with the prevailing authority personnel.

All waste handling and disposal can be accommodated through the Grundon group. This can include the operation of a civic amenity site or collection service to industry, and more comprehensively, the design, development, commissioning, and operation of large refuse handling schemes incorporating sophisticated salvaging systems reclaiming valuable material for ultimate recycling.

TECHNICAL COMMITTEES

The following committees have been set up and will be sponsored by the Department of the Environment and the National Water Council.

STANDING TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON WATER QUALITY

Terms of reference. To investigate and advise on such matters as may be referred to it by the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales and by the National Water Council relating to the quality of river estuarial and coastal waters and of water supplied for ingestion, agriculture and industry; and to report annually.

This Committee replaces the Steering Committee on Water Quality, the British Waterworks Association Committee on Water Quality and Treatment and the Association of River Authorities Water Quality Working Party. The functions of the Harmonised Monitoring and River Water Quality Working Group and the Committee on New Chemicals and Materials of Construction for use in Public Water Supply and Swimming Pools would be taken over and continued by sub-committees.

STANDING COMMITTEE OF ANALYSTS TO REVIEW STANDARD METHODS

Terms of reference. To review continuously the recommended methods for the analysis of water, sewage and effluents and to up-date and provide new methods as necessary; and to report every two years.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON SEWERS AND WATER MAINS

Terms of reference. To advise on the design, construction, operation and maintenance of sewers, water mains and ancillary works; to assess research works in progress and to recommend co-ordination where desirable; to study new techniques and materials and to advise on priorities for research; to report every two years.

STANDING TECHNICAL COMMITTEE ON WATER TREATMENT

Terms of reference. To advise as necessary on the design, construction, operation and maintenance of water treatment works: to study new and existing techniques and materials; to advise on priorities for research in relation to problems experienced in practice and on the application of research results; and to report as necessary but at least every two years.

This Committee will incorporate the Committee on Desalination as a sub-committee.

STANDING TECHNICAL COMMITTEE ON EFFLUENT TREATMENT

Terms of reference. To advise as necessary on the design, construction, operation and maintenance of effluent treatment works: to dtudy new and existing techniques and materials; to advise on priorities for research in relation to problems experienced in practice and on the application of research results; and to report as necessary but at least every two years.

This Committee will incorporate the Working Party on Control Systems as a sub-committee.

TECHNICAL WORKING GROUP ON WASTE OF WATER

Terms of reference:

(i) to produce a list of definitions in connection with waste of water;
(ii) to identify and evaluate the relative importance of common and most frequent points of leakage and to investigate the extent of present waste of water;
(iii) to examine, compare and evaluate present methods of leak detection, waste detection and prevention;
(iv) to identify what research, if any, needs to be carried out;
(v) to consider and advise on an appropriate cost-benefit method whereby water authorities may decide the amount that should be expended on waste detection and prevention; and
(vi) to report.

STANDING TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON WATER REGULATIONS

Terms of reference. To keep under review and advise on the form and content of water regulations; to identify needs for research; and to advise on the implications for the UK of draft EEC directives.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE DISPOSAL OF SEWAGE SLUDGE

Terms of reference. To survey existing methods of the disposal of sewage sludge and of disposal areas; to ascertain the type and composition of sewage sludges and the consequential effects of disposal on the environment and public health both in the short and long term; to recommend standard methods of analysis and to determine availability of nutrients, toxic materials and metals in sewage sludges and in soils, water, flora and fauna and to recommend standardized methods of measuring effects of interaction; to examine the effects on disposal of adding chemicals in sewage treatment processes; to recommend permissible limits for significant substances present in sewage sludge; to study and make recommendations concerning methods and economics of disposal and of the uses of sludge for power and food production; to assess research projects in progress and promote necessary research; to report and to draft a code of practice on the disposal of sewage sludge to land by 1976.

CENTRAL WATER PLANNING UNIT

Reading Bridge Hse., Reading, RG1 8PS (0734 57551).

The Unit provides a common service to the National Water Council, the Water Authorities and the Government. A Committee comprised of representatives of those bodies steers the Unit's programme of work and ensures its freedom to publish independent professional assessments. The principal functions of the Unit are to keep under review national and strategic aspects of water services planning and operation in England and Wales, to identify problems likely to arise in connection with possible long-term developments and to carry out or promote related studies including the development of planning techniques.

UNIT STAFF

Director: O. Gibb, MEng, MICE, MIWES. Assistant Directors: L. E. Taylor, BSc, ACGI, DIC, FICE, FIWES, MBIM; R. J. White, MA, MICE, MIWES.

Superintending Professional and Technical Officers: P. D. Bell, BSc(Tech), MICE, MIWES; D. Watson, FICE, FIWES.

Senior Principal Scientific Officers: J. C. Peters, MA, MIBiol; H. J. Richards, BSc, PAIWES, FGS.

Principal Professional and Technical Officers: R. B. Bussell, MICE, MIWES; R. Fisher, BSc, MSc, ACGI, DIC, MICE; J. G. Flint, MInstWPC; H. B. Jackson, MSc, MICE, MIWES; J. B. WATER DATA UNIT

Department of the Environment, Reading Bridge Hse., Reading, RG1 8PS.

FUNCTIONS

The Water Data Unit was created at the same time as water authorities were established under the Water Act 1973 and is within the Department of the Environment.

Its principal functions are:

a. to advise on the information required for water management purposes and the systems to be adopted for the collection, processing, storage and publication of such data;

b. to ensure the establishment of common standards and methods by the water authorities;

c. to collect and publish such data as is required on a national basis by Government, the National Water Council, and many other interests affected by the activities of the water industry;

d. to provide a computing service for some of the central organizations, and

e. to sponsor research in appropriate subjects.

STEERING GROUP

The Unit's programme of work is determined by a Steering Group consisting of representatives of the principal customers of the Unit in Government and the Scottish Development Department, together with representatives of the National Water Council and water authorities.

The Unit is staffed on a multi-disciplinary basis which enables it to relate technical, scientific and economic aspects of its work to the collection and publication of data. This reflects the multi-purpose concept of the reorganized water industry.

WATER SPACE AMENITY COMMISSION

The Water Space Amenity Commission was established under the Water Act, 1973 on 1st April 1974. It is important to realize that the Commission is not just another name in the mass of national bodies. It is, in fact, an integral part of the great new Water Industry. Not only does the Chairman sit on the National Water Council with the Chairmen of the regional water authorities, but those Chairmen are themselves members of the Commission. Inevitably, therefore, the thinking and planning of the Commission will be water-orientated from the outset and it will consequently bring a fresh approach to all the problems of water-orientated leisure. Because the other major bodies in this field, such as the Sports Council, the Countryside Commission, the English Tourist Board and the County Councils' Association all have a voice on the Commission, it has created a forum for the water industry and the other recreational organizations to exchange their views and discuss their problems.

This new approach to all forms of water recreation is made much more important because both the prime responsibility and the statutory obligation for providing recreation and amenity on waters, which are under the control of the water authorities, fall on the industry itself.

The setting up of the Commission clearly shows that the water industry has accepted this challenge and will solve its problems in its own way, although at the same time working in harmony with local authorities, national bodies and user organizations.

On the management side, the Commission is very anxious to try and prevent the restrictions on waters for exclusive club use. In the past, there has been a tendency in many cases to let off areas of water to clubs or individuals on annual tenancies or long leases.

Recreational management is also going to become of greater significance in the water industry and training schemes for the development of management techniques are now being planned at various levels throughout the country.

THAMES WATER AUTHORITY

Address: New River Head, Rosebery Av., London, EC1R 4TP (01-278 2300).

Area: The Thames Water Authority, the largest of the Regional Water Authorities set up under the Water Act, 1973 provides water services to some 12 million people over an area of about 5,000 square miles. The area of the Authority as defined in the Water Act, 1973 is as follows:

The Thames catchment area, the Lee catchment area and the London excluded area.
The part of the area of the former Essex River Authority the drainage of which is directed to the Thames above the point where the western boundary of the catchment area of the Mar Dyke meets the Thames.
The part of the former Kent River Authority the drainage of which is directed to the Thames above Greenhithe.

The area thus stretches from Brentwood and Gravesend in the east to Cheltenham and Cirencester in the west—a distance of 102 miles and from Banbury and Dunstable in the north to Haslemere and Crawley in the south –a distance of 71 miles. It includes the largely rural and sparsely populated areas of the Cotswolds, the Chilterns, the Marlborough and Berkshire Downs, and the rich farming areas of Oxfordshire in the west and the densely populated urban areas of Greater London and its immediate suburbs in the east.

The Thames Water Authority took over the functions of the following former authorities:
River Authorities: Lee Conservancy Catchment Board, Thames Conservancy, Essex River Authority (part only), Kent River Authority (part only).
Water Supply Undertakings: Croydon London Borough Council, Epsom and Ewell Borough Council, Swindon Borough Council, Cotswold Water Board, Metropolitan Water Board, Middle Thames Water Board, Oxfordshire and District Water Board, Thames Valley Water Board and West Surrey Water Board.
Sewerage and Sewage Disposal Authorities: 163 Authorities, including the Middle Lee Drainage Scheme, West Hertfordshire Main Drainage Authority, West Kent Main Sewerage Board and the main drainage service of the Greater London Council.

Additionally, the following seven Water Companies are situated wholly or mainly within the Authority's area and under the provisions of Section 12 of the Water Act, 1973, act as agents for the Authority; Colne Valley Water Company, East Surrey Water Company, Lee Valley Water Company, Mid Southern Water Company, North Surrey Water Company, Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Company and the Sutton District Water Company.

NORTHERN IRELAND

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT (NI)

Address: Water Service Headquarters, Stormont, Belfast, BT4 3SS (0232 63210).

Director (Water Service): H. T. Bergin.
Assistant Secretary: J. M. Beckett.
Principal Officer: J. E. Irwin.

GENERAL

In the general reorganization of local government in Northern Ireland over seventy local water authorities were replaced when, on 1 October 1973, the Water Service was created as the sole Authority for water and sewerage in the Province.

There are four field Divisions centred in Belfast, Ballymena, Craigavon and Londonderry, with local Departmental offices in other provincial towns. Headquarters at Stormont is responsible for co-ordination, policy and finance.

Over 90% of the $1\frac{1}{2}$ million population have a piped water supply and about 85% have modern sanitation facilities. Since reorganization there has been a continuous effort to improve the water system. Particular emphasis has been placed on:

(a) the improvement of water quality by new methods of treatment and the provision of covered service reservoirs;
(b) the principle of interchangeability in order that surplus supplies may be diverted from one area to another where a shortage exists;
(c) the insurance of continuity of supply by duplicating trunk mains from service reservoirs and treatment plants to networks;
(d) greater efficiency in detection and prevention of waste and the improvement of standards of maintenance and repair of existing installations.

Intensive efforts have been made also in the field of sewage disposal to improve existing installations and to provide new works to reduce the level of pollution in inland and coastal waters and to cater for expanding development.

The present situation in the Province and continuing dry weather have presented problems, but the work of improvement in supply of water and treatment and disposal of sewage goes on.

National Organizations of Local Authorities in Great Britain, British Commonwealth and Foreign Countries

Foreword by FELIX SLAVIK
President of the International Union of Local Authorities and former Lord Mayor of the City of Vienna

Local government throughout the world is going through a period of rapid change and development. Its tasks are increasing, both in scope and complexity. At the same time, central government is stepping in to take over some of its traditional tasks which it considers to be of such a national interest or of such technicality that local government can no longer cope with them. In most countries reforms are either being thought out or already under way so as to enable local government to do its work, as closely to the citizen as possible, in a way compatible with the needs of modern society.

The reform now under way in Great Britain is being followed with keen interest by local authorities all over the world. Whatever the judgement on particular trends or details may be, it is of such a scope and intensity that its development and its results will be of great value for local government in many other countries.

New tasks are emerging. The problems of protecting the human environment were put in the limelight by scientific studies and, in particular, by the U.N. Conference in Stockholm. Work in this field has been continued since the Conference through Government and non-Government Committees, culminating in the U.N. Conference on the Environment in Vancouver in 1976. But however large the new responsibilities of governments and international organisations may be for protecting our national resources and the quality of life, the cooperation and initiative of local authorities will remain indispensable for maintaining and creating the right sort of environment for the urban citizen and the country dweller to which every citizen is entitled.

Whereas decentralization has to play, in many countries, an important role in social and economic development the negative sides of looking at economic development only and disregarding its consequences become clearer every day. It was, therefore, appropriate that IULA selected as the general theme for its 1973 Congress in

Lausanne 'The Age of Leisure'. Thus an opportunity was given to members and officers of local authorities throughout the world to have a closer look in common on the great variety of initiatives and activities which local government can undertake to diversify the quality of human life beyond the mere objective of economic profit. The 1975 Congress basic theme was 'Urbanization' with subsidiary working groups reporting on such matters as:—

A. Providing the urban infrastructure in large conurbations: planning, financing, coordination between levels of government.

B. Middletown (20,000 to 500,000 inhabitants): develop or no-growth.

C. Measures against rapid urbanisation: developing the rural areas, counter-magnets.

D. Suburbanisation and the conservation of rural areas.

E. Problems of the decline of cities over 500,000 inhabitants.

F. Internal management structures for dealing with urban problems.

At this Congress one session was devoted wholly to HABITAT, the U.N. Vancouver Conference on Human Settlements and the Secretary-General of HABITAT, Mr. E. Penalosa also gave an address.

Within Europe, the International Union of Local Authorities is facing new tasks with regard to the enlarged European Community. Legislation binding authorities and citizens across national frontiers means a new challenge for local government associations to represent the interests of their members and the population they are serving. Closer cooperation between IULA and the Council of European Municipalities has enabled the international organisations to be of more service to their members and one way this is being done is by the setting up of a joint liaison office in Brussels through which it is planned to maintain a continuous supply of information from the EEC regarding matters affecting local authorites.

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

President: Felix Slavik

Secretary-General: J. G. Van Putten

Headquarters: 45 Wassenaarseweg, The Hague 2018, Netherlands

Founded in 1913 at the first Congress of Towns, held in Ghent, the International Union of Local Authorities commenced regular activities in Brussels after World War I. Following World War II the Secretariat was moved to The Hague where it was conducted from the office of the Union of Netherlands Municipalities, whose managing Director was at the same time Secretary-General of IULA.

Five years ago IULA moved to new independent Headquarters in The Hague.

The purpose of IULA is to act as a spokesman for local government on the international level; serve as a forum for the exchange of views and the formulation of local government policies; provide services such as organizing training courses, seminars and congresses on topics of current interest to local authorities, answer inquiries for documentation, reference material and international contacts, publish reports of IULA-organized meetings and research, provide a centre for the collection and dissemination of information on local government; and promote the participation of citizens in civic affairs. Its membership is composed of national local government associations; individual local authorities; higher authorities concerned with local government affairs; institutes of public administration, training institutions, municipal credit institutions and other corporate bodies interested in local government and individuals.

IULA is governed by a General Council, on which Great Britain has 10 seats, which meets every two years; and by an Executive Committee, on which Great Britain has one permanent seat. There are also specialist committees on which Great Britain is represented, dealing with such matters as European affairs, wholesale markets (the President of the Council of Wholesale Markets is the General Manager of the Covent Garden Market Authority), technical services to local authorities and town affiliations. These committees have undertaken useful studies, often in co-operation with specialist United Nations agencies, into such subjects as adult education and sport, the fluoridation of drinking water, air pollution, refuse disposal, grain storage, the efficient operation of wholesale markets, and land policy.

IULA has been granted consultative status by the Economic and Social Council of the UN, UNESCO, UNICEF, WHO and the Council of Europe. Representatives of these bodies regularly attend the meetings of IULA and contribute to the work of its specialist committees. The British Section is represented at the European Conference of Local Authorities which operates within the Council of Europe and which is held every two years in Strasbourg.

IULA now has members in some 63 countries and makes a special effort to promote the idea and practice of local government in developing countries by means of eight-week courses for senior central or local government officials from these countries. Four such courses are now held each year and in 1974 the first Spanish-speaking one took place, this being so successful that another was held in 1975. Following an initial period of discussion on the subject matter of the course (e.g. regional development planning, managing the local environment, development finance) the course participants make field visits to two other countries to compare current practice. It has been possible for many of the courses to visit local authorities in Great Britain for this purpose; the arrangements being made by the British Section of IULA with the assistance of the local authority associations and the co-operation and generous hospitality given by the local authorities. The British Government—Overseas Development Association—also assist by means of a small grant and some hospitality. In addition, the training programme includes the holding of regional seminars in developing countries. These seminars, on topics such as municipal finance or the role of local authorities in development planning, have been held in Guyana, Kenya, Malaysia, Nigeria, and further ones are planned for Iran, Brazil, Zambia and elsewhere.

IULA holds an international congress of local authorities every two years with alternate meetings generally taking place outside Europe—at Tel Aviv in 1960, Washington in 1961, Bangkok in 1967, Toronto in 1971 and Tehran in 1975. Pre-congress reports are usually based on written reports submitted by national associations, and discussion of these and related topics takes place in plenary and working group sessions. Recent congress subjects have included "Local Government as Promoter of Economic Development" (Toronto, 1971) and "The Age of Leisure" (Lausanne, 1973); "Urbanization" was the main theme of in 1976 Tehran Congress, with "The Rapid Growth of Cities" and "Suburban Sprawl" as sub-themes. At recent congresses, a resolution on the tasks of local authorities with regard to the congress theme has been adopted and has often received wide publicity.

Holding congresses is not the only way in which IULA helps with the exchange of information. It publishes a monthly "Newsletter" in English, French and German versions and a bi-annual journal. Beginning in the Autumn of 1974, the journal is now published jointly by IULA and the International Federation of Housing and Planning under the title "Planning and Administration", and carries articles on planning, housing and all facets of local government activity and public administration. A listing of recent acquisitions of the jointly operated libraries of IULA and IFHP, "Bibliographia", is issued every two months. In addition to this the library compiles bibliographical lists of literature available on loan and answers telephone and written requests for information on many subjects, such as local government finance, low-cost housing, decision-making, water treatment, urban renewal and new town development.

IULA often undertakes research at the request of members and under contract with international organizations. A preliminary study on "Decision making in the Future" was completed for the European Cultural Foundation as part of Project 3 of Plan Europe 2,000, and a paper on "Regulatory and Development Administration for Environmental Purposes at the Urban Level" was submitted at the request of the Public Administration Division of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs. Staff members are regular contributors on the subject of urban affairs to two international encyclopaedias and are called upon to submit papers to United Nations agencies and various international seminars and meetings. IULA will be playing a leading role in the contributions of non governmental organizations to the Conference/Exhibition on Human Settlements which is to take place in Vancouver in 1976, following leadership in this capacity at the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment in 1972.

In co operation with the Council of European Municipalities a local government liaison office with the European Communities has recently been established at Brussels. This office will eventually take over the information and documentation service on local government aspects of the activities of all European Institutions.

The reports presented to the Congresses, reports of seminars and conferences and all other IULA publications can be obtained from the British Section of IULA, 36 Old Queen Street, London, SW1H 9JE.

BRITISH SECTION

President: The Lord Pargiter, CBE, DL

Chairman: General Council: .

Vice-Presidents: Sir James MacFarlane, DL, The Lord Heycock, CBE, CStJ, DL, LLD

Chairman—Executive Committee: Sir Robert Thomas, DL, JP

Vice-Chairman—Executive Committee: Sir Meredith Whittaker

Secretariat: 36 Old Queen Street, London, SW1H 9JE

The British Section, a member of the International Union, was founded in 1926. All principal local authorities in the United Kingdom have membership in the British Section of IULA through their National Associations, and membership is also open to societies connected with local government.

Because of local government reorganization in England and Wales which came into effect on 1st April, 1974, and in Scotland on 1st April, 1975, a new Constitution has been drawn up for British Section IULA, which is now under the joint control of the local authority Associations. The new Secretariat is:—Joint Secretaries: A. C. Hetherington, CBE, R. H. McCall, OBE, S. Rhodes, OBE; Assistant Secretary: P. N. Bongers; Administrative Officer: Miss V. Whiteley.

The Section holds a National Conference every two years alternating with the International Congress. The Conference discusses the subject to be considered at the International Congress the following year. Papers are prepared by experts for the Conference and these form the basis of the British report to the International Congress.

The last British Conference was held in Bournemouth on 24th and 25th October, 1974, and the main theme discussed was "Urbanization", with sub themes "The Rapid Growth of Cities", and "Suburban Sprawl", the subject for the IULA International Congress held in Tehran in April 1975.

All members regularly receive information on the municipal affairs of other member nations through "The Monthly Newsletter", and also from the British Section's publication entitled "Local Government Abroad". Enquiries about local government practice abroad can be addressed to the Secretariat of the British Section, 36 Old Queen Street, London, SW1H 9JE and if the information is not available either there or at The Hague, a special enquiry in one or more countries can be undertaken. Similarly, many enquiries are addressed to Great Britain from The Hague.

Much interest is taken by the British Section in the formation of civic links between towns abroad and those in Great Britain. The co ordination of arrangements for putting towns with similar geographical, historical or industrial interests in touch with each other has been undertaken by the Joint Twinning Committee, which was formed by the four main associations of local authorities, and on which the British Section is represented. The work in connection with this Committee has now been undertaken by the British Council whose secretary is Mrs. D. Paynton.

IULA brings to its members the positive benefits of regular information about systems of local governments and new ideas and experiments being tried in all parts of the world. In particular, it is able to help the developing countries now introducing new systems of local government; and the British Section, which has behind it the great wealth of experience of British local government, is playing a leading and increasing part in the affairs of the Union. But beyond this, the great value of IULA is its work in strengthening local self-government, in developing democratic institutions, and in bringing together the people responsible for local administration in all parts of the world. It is a vital force for the peace of the world and its work was never more urgent.

COUNCIL OF EUROPEAN MUNICIPALITIES

British Section: Chairman: Coun. Sir Robert Thomas, DL, JP

Vice-Chairman: John Hay; Joint Secretaries: A. C. Hetherington, CBE (Secretary General), R. H. McCall OBE, S. Rhodes, OBE, G. H. Speirs.

International Secretariat: Secretary General: Thomas Philippovich, 89 boulevard Niel, 75017 Paris, France.

CEM was formed in 1951 and now has national sections in fourteen of the member countries of the Council of Europe. Its objects are to achieve and defend municipal autonomy; to facilitate municipal administration, ensure freedom of municipal action and contribute to its prosperity; to develop a European outlook within local and regional authorities with a view to promoting a Federation of European states based on municipal autonomy of these authorities; to ensure the participation and representation of local and regional authorities in European international organizations; to seek provision for a representative assembly of local and regional authorities in the future European institutions.

CEM is directed by an international Committee of Presidents and holds a biennial Assembly of European Municipalities (1970 in London, 1972 in Nice, 1975 in Vienna) and also smaller representative meetings on political and technical subjects of interest to local authorities. It has consultative status with the Council of Europe and plays an active part in the affairs of the Conference of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe. By an agreement concluded with the International Union of Local Authorities in May 1971, CEM and IULA are pledged to the progressive co-ordination of their activities at the European level. Within this framework they are jointly responsible for the Local Government Liaison Office with the European Communities in Brussels, which has been set up to provide an information service to the local authority Associations on Community activities likely to be of relevance to local government.

The British Section of CEM has recently been reconstituted with the support of the UK local authority associations and its secretariat is provided jointly with that of the British Section of IULA. Local authority membership is provided for through the associations, but in addition individual membership is open to members and officers of local authorities and persons connected with local government. The Executive Committee of the British Section consists of seven representatives nominated by the local authority associations and six members drawn from among the individual members of the Section.

NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR EPILEPTICS—Chalfont Centre for Epilepsy, Chalfont Saint Peter, Bucks.

The National Society for Epileptics, founded in 1892, has as its stated aim the promotion of the welfare of those suffering from epilepsy. In furtherance of this aim they have established the Chalfont Centre for Epilepsy which has two main functions. Firstly for those people with epilepsy unable to live or work outside a protective environment, to provide residential care, experienced medical supervision, and the opportunity to work within the limits of their disabilities. And secondly to admit those in temporary difficulties with a view to their early return to the community. These latter patients present various problems but the aim is to help in the stabilization of their epilepsy, to rehabilitate them in the widest sense of the word, and in some cases to assess whether the attacks from which they suffer are epileptic. Short term patients are admitted in the first instance to The National Hospital—Chalfont Special Centre which is run jointly with The National Hospital, Queen Square. The Centre is situated in the country and our 480 adult patients live in 19 houses, divided to some extent according to age, the extent of their disability, and the degree of nursing care they require. Short-term patients live in special houses with a greater degree of privacy and are expected to accept considerable personal responsibility. All applications are very carefully considered but the Chalfont Centre is not a mental hospital and we do not feel that we can help those whose primary disability is severe mental deficiency or psychiatric disturbance.

ADVISORY, CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION SERVICE

Cleland Hse., Page St., London, SW1P 4ND (01-222 4383).
Chairman of the Council: J. E. Mortimer.
Secretary: D. R. F. Turner.
Chief Conciliation Officer: A. S. Kerr.

The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) was set up by the Government on an administrative basis on September 2, 1974 to assist trade unions and employers in their conduct of industrial relations. The Employment Protection Act 1975 placed ACAS on a statutory basis from 1 January, 1976.

The ACAS, which is independent of Government and of any Government department, offers a conciliation service as a means of avoiding and resolving industrial disputes and provides facilities for arbitration when requested. It offers advice and assistance on a wide range of industrial relations problems and longer-term investigations are undertaken as a means of improving and extending collective bargaining.

The service is run by a Council consisting of a chairman and nine members. Three of the members are nominated by the TUC, three by the CBI, and three are independent.

In all its work, ACAS recognises that direct responsibility for the conduct of industrial relations rests with employers and employees and their representatives.

ACAS provides confidential advice and practical assistance free of charge to both management and unions, and operates as an independent third party in helping the parties to resolve their difficulties and to establish a sound basis for their relationships.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible in England and Wales for administering government policy for agriculture, horticulture and fishing industries. In association with the Intervention

Board for Agricultural Produce and the other Agricultural Departments in the UK it is responsible for the administration of the EEC common agricultural and fisheries policy and for various national support schemes. It also administers schemes for the control and eradication of animal and plant diseases; and the improvement and drainage of agricultural land. The Ministry sponsors the food and drink manufacturing industries and the food and drink distributive trades. It is concerned with the quality of food, food compositional standards, hygiene and labelling and advertising. It acts as agent for the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection in the administration and operation of food subsidies. It has certain responsibilities for ensuring public health standards in the manufacture, preparation and distribution of basic foods. Some functions relating to agriculture and fisheries in Wales are the joint responsibility of the Minister and the Secretary of State for Wales. Also certain of the Ministry's responsibilities for animal health extend to Scotland. The Ministry maintains relations with overseas countries and participates in some activities of certain international organizations concerned with agriculture, fisheries and food. The Ministry is also responsible for the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew.

BRITISH TOURIST AUTHORITY

Queen's House, 64 St. James's Street, London, SW1A 1NF (Tel. 01-629 9191)

Under the Development of Tourism Act 1969, four co-equal statutory tourist bodies were established; the British Tourist Authority, the English Tourist Board, the Scottish Tourist Board and the Wales Tourist Board.

The Authority consists of a chairman and five members appointed by the Department of Trade (Sir Alexander Glen (Chairman), Viscount Garnock, I. Harrington, H. E. Marking, D. C. Macdonald, Mrs. A. Munro) together with the chairmen of the English, Scottish and Wales Boards (Sir Mark Henig, R. P. MacLellan and T. Mervyn Jones). Lord O'Neill, chairman of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, also attends Authority meetings to give advice on the promotion overseas of Northern Ireland.

The Authority has specific responsibility for promoting tourism to Great Britain from overseas; it also has a general responsibility for the promotion and development of tourism and tourist facilities within Great Britain as a whole. With the agreement of the corresponding bodies in Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, the Authority may also carry out promotion overseas on behalf of those territories.

Director General: L. J. Lickorish.
Secretary: W. R. L. Addison.

ENGLISH TOURIST BOARD

4 Grosvenor Gdns., London, SW1W 0DU (01-730 3400)

The English Tourist Board is a statutory body created by the Development of Tourism Act, 1969, to develop and market England's tourism. Its main objectives are to encourage British people to visit England; to encourage people living in England to take their holidays there and to encourage the provision and improvement of tourist amenities and facilities in England.

ETB has a statutory duty to advise Ministers on tourism matters relating to England.

Eleven English regional tourist boards, sponsored and grant-aided by ETB, cover the whole country and are responsible for the planning, development and marketing of tourism in their particular areas. In effect, each of these eleven regional boards is a partnership between ETB, local government and the trade interests in the region.

Chairman: Sir Mark Henig.
Other Board Members: W. Adkins, TD, FCA; Michael Dower, MA(Cantab), ARICS, DipTP, MRTPI; Derek O. Gladwin, JP; S. G. Royle; Sir Lou Sherman, OBE, JP; Mrs. A. Yates, CBE, Jp, LMRSH.

Atlantic Hse., Holborn Viaduct, London, EC1N 2PD (01-248 5744)

The Central Office of Information is a common service department which produces information and publicity material, and supplies publicity services for those other Government departments which require them. In the United Kingdom it conducts Government display press, television and poster advertising (except for the National Savings Committee), produces and distributes booklets, leaflets, films, television material, exhibitions, photographs and other visual material; distributes departmental press notices. For the overseas departments it supplies British information posts overseas with press, radio and television material, booklets, magazines, reference services, films, exhibitions, photographs, display and reading room material; manages schemes for promoting the overseas sale of periodicals and newspapers and arranges tours in the United Kingdom for official visitors from overseas. Ministerial responsibility for COI rests with Civil Service Department Ministers, but the ministers whose departments it serves are responsible for the policy expressed in its work.

The Commissioners' general function is to promote the effective use of charitable resources by encouraging the development of better methods of administration, by giving charity trustees information or advice and by checking abuses. Dealings with property forming part of the permanent endowment of a charity or property which has at any time been occupied for the purposes of the charity are subject to the control of the Charity Commissioners and their consent or approval is required for the disposal of property held on charitable trusts by local authorities, unless the charity is an exempt charity within the meaning of the Charities Act 1960, or is otherwise excepted by order or regulations.

The Official Custodian for Charities holds investments for charities and remits the income, free of income tax, to trustees. The Official Custodian for Charities also arranges for charities, on application, to participate in an Official Investment Fund for the benefit of charities through which they can obtain a spread of investments under skilled professional management.

DEVELOPMENT COMMISSION

11 Cowley Street, Westminster, London, SW1P 3NA (Tel. 01-222 9134)

The Development Commission is a body of eight Commissioners, appointed by Royal Warrant, whose statutory duty is to consider and to report to the Department of the Environment upon all applications for advances from the Development Fund. The Development Fund was established by the Development and Road Improvement Funds Acts 1909 and 1910. The scope of the Fund has been considerably altered over the years but broadly any scheme which may be calculated to benefit the rural economy of England and Wales may be eligible for assistance from the Fund provided that no other statutory provision for helping it exists. At present the main types of activity assisted are:

(1) the continued development of advice, instruction and credit services for small manufacturing and servicing industries in rural areas and a limited scheme of loans for assistance to tourism enterprises in the rural parts of Development Areas of England and Wales. This work is carried out through the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas;

(2) the provision of factory premises of various kinds in rural areas where diversity of or increased employment is needed to prevent or check depopulation or to meet other problems;

(3) assisting voluntary bodies who provide in the countryside various services designed to create opportunities for a richer social or intellectual life for country people;

(4) work which is of interest to several Government departments but which no particular department has powers to assist;

(5) financing marketing and co-operative schemes which can strengthen the economy of agricultural or fishing communities;

(6) assisting and sponsoring social and economic surveys in rural areas.

The Commission has a special interest in the depopulating rural areas. It is entering into a new phase in its work and is planning to tackle the problems of the regeneration of those areas by a more integrated and comprehensive approach in which all aspects of the needs of an area will be considered. The Commission works in close partnership with the local authorities and others in selected areas in this work.

At present the Commission is concerned with community development work in rural areas of Scotland, but the future responsibility for this and for assistance for economic and social development in rural Wales is under consideration.

Chairman: Rt. Hon. Lord Northfield.
Other Commissioners: Marquess of Bute, JP; B. Davies; J. P. R. Glyn, CBE; Dr. R. C. Tress, CBE; Sir Jack Longland, MA; Miss F. M. Reed.
Secretary: K. J. Reeves.

EMPLOYMENT, DEPARTMENT OF

8 St. James's Square, London, SW1Y 4JB (Tel. 01-214 6000)

The Department of Employment is generally responsible for the efficient use of manpower resources in Britain. Many of the Department's executive functions and services have been transferred to a number of new bodies, operating independently, but reporting to the Secretary of State for Employment. The Department's responsibilities include:

general manpower policy

policy on the employment of women and older workers manpower aspects of regional policy

the Unit for Manpower Studies

the Work Research Unit equality of opportunity and racial harmony at work

the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service employment of Commonwealth and foreign workers administration of Quota and Designated Employments Scheme under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944

the provision of Sheltered Employment generally dealing with industrial relations, namely questions affecting relations between employers and employees. In particular with:

> assistance in the prevention or settlement of industrial disputes including the administration of the Conciliation Act 1896, and the Industrial Courts Act 1919, and the Terms and Conditions of Employment Act 1959, conciliation under the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act, 1974.
> administration of the Wages Councils Act 1959
> improvement of security and status at work, e.g. through the Contracts of Employment Act 1972, and the encouragement of good management practice in industry through, for example, the Code of Industrial Relations Practice > administration of the Redundancy Payments Acts 1965 and 1969
> administration of the Dock Workers (Regulation of Employment) Act 1946 payment of unemployment benefit has been separated from the employment services. Payment of benefit has now been organized as a separate service within the department under a regional benefit manager at each of its regional offices. Payment in cash at local offices was abolished in July 1973 and replaced by girocheque sent to the home of the claimant. Arrangements are now being made for the payment of unemployment benefit to be made by computer

MANPOWER SERVICES COMMISSION

Selkirk Hse., 166 High Holborn, London, WC1V 6PF (Tel. 01-836 1213)

The Manpower Services Commission was established to develop a comprehensive manpower strategy for Britain and to advise the government on manpower policies. It administers the public employment and training services through its two executive arms, the Training Services Agency and the Employment Service Agency which incorporates Professional and Executive Recruitment.

The Commission recently established a £70 million Job Creation Programme aimed at providing temporary employment to unemployed young people and adults.

The Employment Service Agency runs

((i) Jobcentres and Employment Offices. Jobcentres are replacing the old style employment exchanges. They differ from employment exchanges in their siting, design and overall presentation of premises and their specially trained staffs. They offer self-service facilities for job seekers and expert advice on employment problems for both employers and work people. It is expected that by the middle of 1976 more than 200 of these offices will have been opened.

(ii) the Professional and Executive Recruitment Service (PER). This is a separately managed part of the Agency. It operates through a network of 36 offices staffed by specially trained consultants and uses a sophisticated computer system for matching people with jobs. Charges to employers for the service have been made since 1 June 1973 and are payable only on successful placings;

(iii) the Occupational Guidance Service. This is provided in 45 centres in Britain but is available through almost all Jobcentres and Employment Offices. It is open to people who are choosing or thinking about a change of occupation and feel they would benefit from expert advice;

(iv) schemes to help workers to move to new jobs in areas away from their homes;

(v) employment resettlement services for disabled people and Employment Rehabilitation Centres (ERCs). There are 26 ERCs which provide courses to help people who, following illness or injury, are in need of physical and mental rehabilitation before returning to employment, often in different occupations.

HEALTH AND SAFETY COMMISSION (Established 1 October 1974)

Baynards Hse., 1 Chepstow Pl., London, W2 4TY (01-229 3456)

The Health and Safety Commission is a statutory body (of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974). Its main responsibility is to make such arrangements as it considers appropriate for the following:

(a) securing the health, safety and welfare of all persons at work (including employers, employees and self-employed);
(b) preventing risks to the health and safety of the general public arising from work activities;
(c) controlling explosives or highly flammable substances;
(d) controlling emissions into the atmosphere of noxious or offensive substances;
(e) carrying out research and the provision of training and information on matters affecting health and safety at work.

The Commission is empowered to direct investigations and inquiries into accidents etc. It may submit proposals to the Secretary of State for the making of regulations. It has power to approve codes of practice.

Chairman: W. Simpson
Secretary: V. G. Munns.

HEALTH AND SAFETY EXECUTIVE (Established 1 January 1975)

Baynards Hse., 1 Chepstow Pl., London, W2 4TY (01-229 3456).

The Health and Safety Executive was established under Section 10 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. It is responsible for enforcing the relevant statutory provisions (i.e. previously existing health and safety legislation, the provisions of the 1974 Act and regulations made under it) unless other bodies are specifically made responsible (by further legislation) for enforcement in certain circumstances. It is also responsible for implementing the Health and Safety Commission's advisory functions.

The Executive consists of a secretariat and a number of operational divisions made up of the former Inspectorates of Alkali and Clean Air, Explosives, Factories, Mines and Quarries, Nuclear Installations; the Employment Medical Advisory Service; a Research and Scientific Support Division which includes the former Safety in Mines Research Establishment. There is also a Corporate Services Branch and other common services branches covering e.g. Information and Legal Services.

The Secretary of State may by regulations make local authorities responsible for the enforcement of the relevant statutory provisions to such extent as may be prescribed and arrange for transfer or assignment of responsibility between the Executive and local authorities. The local authorities concerned are district councils, London Boroughs and the GLC.

TRAINING SERVICES AGENCY

162–168 Regent St., London, W1R 6DE (01-214 6000)

(i) is responsible for the promotion of better training for employment in industry;

(ii) runs the Training Opportunities Scheme (TOPS). This Scheme came into operation in August 1972 and provides training to meet the needs of individuals in Skillcentres (previously called Government Training Centres), colleges of further education, employers' establishments, other independent organizations and, where appropriate, universities. The Scheme, which is undergoing a major expansion, trained 60,000 people in 1975 and the objective for 1976 is 80,000. In 1976–77 TOPS has an annual budget of about £150 million. There are at present 58 Skillcentres in Britain offering courses in 60 occupational skills. Provision has already been made for the building of a further 13 centres to become operational between now and 1979;

(iii) co-ordinates the work of industrial training boards. The boards were set up in the mid-1960s and have the authority and responsibility to promote adequate training in their industries. There are 23 boards covering industries with 12 million workers. Since 1 Apr. 1975 the Training Services Agency has been paying the operational expenses of the boards and has provided funds for certain key training activities, but levies are normally limited to one per cent of an employer's payroll and there is exemption for small firms and firms with adequate training arrangements;

(iv) in conjunction with the industrial training boards, has implemented a contingency plan to reduce the effects of recession and high unemployment on training. The plan concentrates on offsetting shortfalls in intakes to training primarily by grants for long term training, and by expanding TOPS courses for school leavers and provision for adults.

CAREERS SERVICE

The restructure of the Careers Service (formerly Youth Employment Service) coincided with the reorganization of local government in England and Wales in 1974 and in Scotland in 1975. The Employment and Training Act 1973 placed a mandatory requirement on all local education authorities to provide a vocational guidance service for pupils/students attending educational institutions other than universities (in Scotland universities and central institutions) and an employment service for those leaving them. At national level the Secretary of State's responsibilities in this field are carried out by the Department of Employment's Careers Service Branch at 97 Tottenham Court Rd., London W1.

Planning

The Department is responsible for the system of Town and Country Planning in England. The main statute is the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 (which consolidated previous legislation) as amended by the Town and Country Planning (Amendment) Act 1972. It has been further amended by the Local Government Act 1972, which allocated planning functions between County and District planning authorities (its chief provisions became operative on 1 April 1974), and by The Local Government Act 1974. The 1971 Act (as amended) provides for a new development plan system which is being introduced progressively. The new system consists of two main elements: the structure plan, prepared by the county planning authority, setting out the main strategic planning policies and the most important proposals for change, which requires the approval of the Secretary of State; and local plans, usually prepared by district planning authorities, setting out appropriately detailed proposals, which are subject to certification by the county, normally are adopted by the authorities themselves following certain statutory procedures for considering objections. The districts are also responsible for most development control decisions although the counties have important powers relating to certain "county matters" and strategic and highway considerations. The Secretary of State determines, or appoints inspectors to determine, appeals from applicants aggrieved by decisions of local planning authorities on applications for planning permission.

The Department is responsible also for the community land scheme. The Community Land Act 1975 gives local authorities a new role in supplying land for private development, and wider powers of land acquisition. Authorities' programmes of acquisition and disposal require the approval of the Secretary of State, whose functions include also the consideration of compulsory purchase orders and the giving of consent to disposals of land.

The Secretary of State also has responsibilities in connection with the Countryside Commission under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 and the Countryside Act 1968 and makes orders and gives consents under the various enactments relating to allotments, commons, exchange of lands, apportionment and redemption of rents, and glebe land. His functions also include the approval of schemes for the clearance of derelict land and the payment of grants to local authorities.

Under the New Towns Act 1965 (which consolidated pensions legislation) the Secretary of State is responsible for designating land and for appointing and controlling development corporations for the purpose of building new towns. The Act of 1965 also provides for development corporations to be wound up and their assets and liabilities transferred to the Commission for the New Towns when the Minister is satisfied that the purposes for which the corporations were created have been substantially achieved.

The New Towns (Amendment) Act 1976 provides for the transfer to district councils of the ownership of rented dwellings and related assets held by development corporations and the Commission for the New Towns.

The Town Development Act 1952 complements the New Towns Act 1965. It enables existing towns to expand to take people and industry from congested and over-populated areas. Exchequer grants are payable towards some of the expenditure incurred.

Transport Industries

Transport Industries are concerned with road and rail transport in both the public and private sectors and ports. Subjects include private harbour legislation, licensing of port employers; British Railways Board policy, railway passenger services, railway safety and investigation of accidents; nationalized transport, international transport, particularly EEC matters, freight transport, transport of dangerous goods; goods vehicle licensing.

Environmental Protection

Under the Water Act 1973, the Secretary of State is responsible for promoting a national policy for water and for securing the effective execution of this policy. He is advised by the National Water Council. The nine Regional Water Authorities set up in England (and the Welsh National Water Development Authority) are each responsible for all aspects of the water cycle within their own areas. The Secretary of State is responsible for appointing some members of each English authority. He has powers of direction of a general nature and particular powers with regard to charging schemes and other financial matters. He has to approve the programme of each Regional Water Authority.

The Department is responsible for policies relating to noise, clean air, and the disposal of wastes.

It co-ordinates central government functions on pollution control and the United Kingdom contribution to international activities in this field.

Highways

The Secretary of State is the highway authority for some 6,500 miles of trunk roads in England of which about 1,200 miles are motorway. He appoints county councils, the Greater London Council and certain London borough councils as his agents for the maintenance of these roads and also for the smaller construction and improvement schemes.

Six Road Construction Units, covering the whole of England, are responsible for the design and supervision of most major trunk road schemes. Each under a Director, is staffed jointly by the Department and participating counties.

The Secretary of State is the confirming authority for special road schemes and compulsory purchase orders made by local highway authorities. Aid to local authorities for transport expenditure is given through Rate Support Grant and Transport Supplementary Grant. Transport Supplementary Grant is a block grant paid to County Councils whose expenditure for the year, as accepted by the Secretary of State, exceeds the limit determined by a formula prescribed in the Rate Support Grant Order.

Eight Regional Controllers (Roads and Transportation), mostly under a Regional Director, maintain close contact with local highway authorities. For Greater London the function is carried out by London Highways Division at headquarters.

Policy on road safety is controlled by the Road Safety Directorate at Headquarters while basic research is conducted by the Road Research Laboratory. Local liaison is maintained between the Divisional Road Engineers, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, and Police, Highway and Education Authorities. The Department has set up Road Safety Units in the North East, North West, West Riding, Midlands and Southern England to study local accident situations and help in the planning of remedial measures. The Secretary of State issues a Highway Code intended to secure higher standards of road behaviour by all road users. Assistance towards expenditure incurred by local authorities on road safety information and training activities is included in the Rate Support Grant made under the Local Government Act 1966.

Housing

The Secretary of State is responsible for housing policy in England and related legislation. His functions include the consideration of compulsory purchase orders and clearance orders under the Housing Acts; the approval of local authority housing schemes for subsidy purposes; the issue of consents to borrowing by local authorities for the purposes of the Housing Acts and the Small Dwellings Acquisition Acts; and the payment of Exchequer contributions authorized by the Housing Acts.

ECONOMIC COUNCILS AND BOARDS—See Section 27

LOCAL GOVERNMENT AUDIT

Local authorities spend large sums of money, derived mainly from rates and taxes and external audit has an important part to play in the maintenance of public confidence in these bodies. Part VIII of the Local Government Act 1972 contains the external audit provisions in relation to local authorities in England and Wales.

The Act provides for a choice between the district auditor and an "approved" auditor and the 422 new principal authorities have exercised their choice as follows:

22 for approved audit and 7 shared.

An approved auditor must be a member of one of the principal accountancy bodies and his appointment must be approved by the Secretary of State for the Environment.

District auditors are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment but they are independent officers and are not subject to his direction or control. England and Wales are divided for audit purposes into a number of audit districts each with a district auditor; a list of their names, addresses and telephone numbers appears below.

In carrying out their audits, district auditors have quasi-judicial powers to deal with matters of illegality, misconduct or failure to bring money to account. If a district auditor considers that an item of account is contrary to law, he may apply to the courts for a declaration to that effect. The court may make, or refuse such a declaration, and if it makes a declaration, order the accounts to be rectified, and, if relevant, order those responsible for incurring or authorizing such expenditure to repay it. Where the amount involved exceeds £2,000 and the person responsible is a member of a local authority, the court may also order disqualification from membership. Where it appears to a district auditor that there has been a failure to account or that loss has been incurred through wilful misconduct, he certifies the sum to be due from the person responsible. Disqualification ensues in cases of wilful misconduct where the amount exceeds £2,000. District auditors are also required to hear any objections made by local government electors to items in the accounts.

Where circumstances arise on accounts audited by an approved auditor which require the exercise of the above powers, they are brought into operation by the Secretary of State directing a district auditor to hold an extraordinary audit.

The audit procedure provides for certain formalities to be observed: e.g.

1. deposit of accounts and vouchers to enable interested persons to inspect and copy any of the documents deposited.
2. notice by advertisement in the local press by the local authority of the time and place of holding the audit and where the accounts etc., may be inspected.

During the audit any elector may question the auditor about the accounts and the auditor may demand the production of documents relating to the accounts.

FORESTRY COMMISSION

231 Corstorphine Rd., Edinburgh, EH12 7AT (Tel. 031-334 0303).
25 Savile Row, London, W1X 2AY (Tel. 01-734 4251)

The Forestry Commission operates as the managers of the national forest enterprise and as the national forest authority. As the managers of the forestry enterprise the Commissioners are charged primarily with the production of timber for use by home-grown timber-using industries. Secondly, it is responsible for allowing reasonable access to the forests, the provision of recreational facilities there, wildlife management in the woodlands, and for paying due regard to the beauty of the countryside in its afforestation activities. As the forest authority the Commission administers legislation mainly concerned with plant health, and also maintains two research establishments, the results of whose work is available for all.

The Forestry Commission for many years has given Grant Aid towards the cost of private tree planting.

On 5 July 1974 the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced details of a new Dedication Scheme which started with effect from 1 October 1974. The Forestry Commission will consider for entry into this new (Basis III) Dedication Scheme both existing woodlands and bare land for planting, provided that it normally extends to at least one hectare (approximately 2½ acres). In return for accepting the obligations of the Basis III Scheme an owner will be entitled to receive a basic grant of £45 a hectare (£18·21 an acre) payable after approved planting of an approved crop. For land approved for planting with hardwoods a grant of £125 a hectare (£50·59 an acre) will be payable in addition to the basic grant.

Owners will be entitled to retain their existing rights and obligations by remaining under the previous schemes (i.e. Dedication Basis I & II, Approved Woodlands, Small Woodlands and Interim schemes), or they can transfer into the new scheme (Dedication Basis III) any area which meets its requirements.

Further information may be obtained from the regional Conservators of Forestry or Forestry Commission, 231 Corstorphine Rd., Edinburgh, EH12 7AT.

The Commission consists of a Chairman, Lord Taylor of Gryfe and four full-time Commissioners. Of these, one is the Director-General, John Dickson, CB, LLD; G. D. Holmes, G. G. Stewart and J. M. Hunter, MC are in charge respectively of harvesting and marketing, forest and estate management and administration and finance.

Additionally, there are five part-time Commissioners with special interests—A. M. Donnet, CBE, JP (Trade Unions); C. G. A. Latham, MA, FCA (Timber Trade); M. L. Bourdillon, DL, JP (private forestry); Sir Ralph Verney, Bt., KBE, DL, JP (private forestry and the countryside); Capt. D. S. Bowser, JP (commerce).

HEALTH AND SOCIAL SECURITY, DEPARTMENT OF

Alexander Fleming House, Elephant and Castle, London, SE1 (Tel. 01-407 5522)

The Department is responsible for the central administration of the National Health Service and of the Social Services provided by local authorities in England and for the Social Security schemes in England, Wales and Scotland.

1. The Department has central responsibility for:

(a) The hospital services, the general medical, dental, ophthalmic and pharmaceutical services, the personal health services previously provided by local authorities and the school health service, all of which are now secured within their respective boundaries, by Regional and Area Health Authorities.

(b) The Social Services provided by local authorities for the elderly, physically handicapped, mentally disordered and under the Local Authority Social Services Act some services previously the responsibility of the Children's Department of the Home Office (community homes, youth treatment centres, Child Care Services, services provided under the Children Act 1948, the Children and Young Persons Acts 1963 and 1969).

(c) Local authority work on the control of infectious diseases, notification of births, registration of nursing homes, nurseries, and child minders, the appointment and duties of Public Health Inspectors and Directors of Social Services.

(d) Port Health Authorities' functions in health control at sea and air ports and for the administration of International Health Regulations.

2. The Department administers directly:

(a) Centres dealing with the provision and fitting of artificial limbs and appliances and the supply of vehicles and invalid carriages to War Pensioners and National Health Service patients.

(b) Four special hospitals (Broadmoor, Park Lane, Moss Side and Rampton) for those suffering from mental disorder with criminal, violent or dangerous propensities.

3. Other functions include:

(a) Administration of the Welfare Foods Service.

(b) Purchase under central contract of some medical, surgical, laboratory and domestic equipment, and drugs for supply to hospitals, laboratories and other establishments within the NHS.

(c) Control of the manufacture and import of therapeutic substances under the Therapeutic Substances Act 1956 and the Medicines Act 1968; health aspects of Civil Defence, and administration of the Anatomy Acts.

(d) Administration (with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) of the Food and Drugs Acts, including the licensing of Food and Drugs Authorities, and matters relating to food hygiene and food poisoning.

(e) Liaison with the Medical Research Council on the control of the medical and dental use of ionizing radiations.

(f) Legislation relating to the professions concerned with health; arrangements for the training of staff in the Health and Social Services.

(g) Liaison with the World Health Organisation, the Council of Europe and Western European Union on health matters and responsibility for recruiting British health personnel for service abroad and training Commonwealth and foreign health personnel in the United Kingdom.

(h) Responsibility for administering the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967, including arrangements for notifying abortions and approval of places where abortions may be carried out.

(i) Medical advice to the Department of the Environment on medical aspects of environmental hygiene (eg. water supplies, sewage disposal, public cleansing, atmospheric pollution).

Some health questions are dealt with by other Departments: for example, by the Department of Trade and Industry (protection of the Mercantile Marine under the Merchant Shipping Acts), by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (certain powers and duties relating to production of food and milk), by the Ministry of Defence (health and medical services of the Navy, Army and Air Force at home and abroad), and by the Department of Employment (administration of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, and the Factory Acts 1937–48).

The Registrar General is responsible of the preparation of statistics derived from the Census returns and from the returns of births, marriages, and deaths forwarded to him by local officers throughout the country. He is also responsible by arrangement with the Department of Health and Social Security, for the preparation of statistics of the infectious diseases required to be notified by the Medical Officers for Environmental Health. Statistical information of this kind and also relating to the National Health Service is furnished in the Department's Annual Report and in the annual report of the Chief Medical Officer as well as in the publications of the Office of Population Census and Surveys.

In the discharge of his various functions the Secretary of State has at his disposal a staff comprising administrative, professional, scientific and technical officers. The professional officers include specialists in various branches of preventive medicine and hygiene, pathology and bacteriology, engineers and architects.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Department of Health and Social Security administers the scheme of National Insurance, Industrial Injuries, Family Allowances and War pensions. Within the Department is the Supplementary Benefits Commission which is responsible for guiding the scheme of supplementary benefits and determining awards (see below).

The Department of Health and Social Security is responsible for the award and payment of war pensions and for the administration of the unified scheme of social insurance provided by the National Insurance Acts and the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Acts.

The Family Allowances Acts also administered by the Department provide a weekly allowance for families with two or more children under the age limits of the Scheme.

Generally speaking the National Insurance scheme covers everyone living in Great Britain who is over school-leaving age and under pension age. For insurance purposes the population is divided into three classes: Class 1, persons gainfully occupied under a contract of service or apprenticeship; Class 2, persons gainfully occupied but not working under the control of an employer; Class 3, non-employed persons—i.e. all those not in Class 1 or 2. Special arrangements apply to married women and students.

Family Income Supplement is payable to families with at least one dependent child where the head of the family is in full-time paid work and the family's gross income is less than a prescribed amount.

The scheme is financed by contributions paid by insured persons, employers, and the Exchequer. The rate of contributions paid and the benefits obtainable by an insured person depend on his class in insurance. Non-employed persons (Class 3) have insurance cover for retirement pension, widow's benefits, guardians' allowance, certain maternity benefits, and death grant. Self employed (Class 2) and employed (Class 1) persons are similarly covered but the former can also qualify for sickness benefit and the latter for sickness and unemployment benefits, and graduated addition to retirement pension.

Employed persons also pay contributions under the Industrial Injuries scheme and are thus insured against disablement or death caused by an accident or disease arising out of their employments.

Attendance Allowance is payable for adults or children who are so severely disabled that they require a lot of attention or supervision by day or at night. Generally speaking, it is not payable for people in NHS hospitals, or certain other accommodation where a contribution towards the cost is made out of public funds.

The Department maintains a network of about 700 Local Offices throughout Great Britain where claims to benefit should be made and advice can be obtained. Copies of leaflets dealing with various aspects of the Department's work can be obtained at local Social Security Offices, free of charge.

SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFITS

People in Great Britain aged 16 or over not in full-time work, attending school or involved in a trade dispute and whose resources are insufficient to meet their requirements are entitled to supplementary benefit. There is a supplementary pension for those over the minimum retirement age 65 for men 60 for women and a supplementary allowance for others. The benefit is the amount by which a person's requirements exceed his available resources, as defined in the Act. The calculation of requirements is based on different amounts for single people and family groups (for blind people there are special higher amounts) with, in each case, an addition for rent. For the elderly and most other long-term cases higher scale rates are payable.

The Supplementary Benefits Commission provide temporary accommodation in reception centres for "persons without a settled way of living", and run twelve non-residential and three residential re-establishment centres. The Commission are responsible under the Polish Resettlement Act 1947, for providing accommodation for Poles coming within the scope of the Act and investigation into the resources of certain applicants for legal aid.

HOME OFFICE

The Home Office deals with those internal affairs in England and Wales not assigned to other government departments. The Home Secretary is the channel of communication between the Crown and the subjects of the realm, and between the United Kingdom Governments and the Governments of the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. He exercises certain Prerogative powers of the Crown of which the most important are the prerogative of mercy and the maintenance of the Queen's Peace. He is also concerned with: the administration of justice; criminal law; the treatment of offenders; probation; the prison service; public morals and certain public safety matters; the police, fire and civil defence services; immigration and nationality; community relations; and community and urban programmes. He also deals with the broad questions of national broadcasting policy.

Other Home Office responsibilities include: addresses and petitions to the Queen and preparation of presentations to Parliament; preparation of patents of nobility for peers, and formal proceedings for the granting of honours; requests for the extradition of criminals; scrutiny of local authority byelaws; grant of licences for scientific experiments on animals; exhumation and removal of bodes; firearms; dangerous drugs; general policy on liquor licensing laws, gaming and lotteries; charitable collections and Charities Act 1960; theatre and cinema licensing; co-ordination of government action in relation to the voluntary social services; and sex discrimination policy.

REGIONAL AND DISTRICT OFFICES

The Department of Industry's main regional network is based on its eight Regional Offices in England.

The Regional Offices represent the Department in its dealings with industry, local authorities, the Regional Offices of other Government Departments and other local bodies and organizations. The Regional Offices are also responsible for administering selective assistance to industry in Assisted Areas and for other aspects of regional industrial development. Some activities are also undertaken by the Regional Offices on behalf of the Department of Trade, such as export promotion, while the Regional Offices also serve the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection and the Department of Energy.

In addition some parts of the work of these Departments are handled through specialist local offices. The main ones are the offices dealing with Regional Development Grants and the residual Investment Grants under the Department of Industry, and HM Coastguard, Mercantile Marine Offices, Marine Survey Offices and the Official Receivers in bankruptcy and company liquidation under the Department of Trade. The Export Credits Guarantee Department also has local offices. A chain of 10 Small Firms Information Centres has also been established by the Department of Industry.

LAND REGISTRY, HM

Headquarters Office: Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, WC2A 3PH (Tel. 01-405 3488)

The registration of title to land was first introduced in England and Wales by the Land Registry Act 1862. Many changes have been made to the original system by subsequent legislation and HM Land Registry operates today under the Land Registration Acts 1925 to 1971. The object of registering title to land is for dealings with it to be made more safe, simple and economical. This is achieved by maintaining a register of land owners whose title is guaranteed by the State and by providing simple forms enabling them to transfer, mortgage and otherwise dispose of their registered titles. This simplification should keep the cost of dealing with registered land at a lower level than that for unregistered land. It is more economic to have specified areas of the country where registration of title is compulsory on sale and having first registration take place in those areas alone. Under the Land Registration Act 1966, the voluntary first registration of land in non-compulsory areas was severely curtailed in order to facilitate an accelerated extension of the compulsory system and the intention is that registration of title shall ultimately be universal throughout England and Wales. Over the years, voluntary registration in the non-compulsory areas has been common and it is still possible to register building estates, upon certain conditions, throughout the country. A great deal of land in some non-compulsory areas is therefore already on the register.

HM Land Registry is administered under the Lord Chancellor by the Chief Land Registrar and the work is decentralized to a number of regional offices as specified below. The Chief Land Registrar is also responsible for the Land Charges Department under the Land Charges Act 1925 and for the Agricultural Credits Department under the Agricultural Credits Act 1928.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOUNDARY COMMISSION FOR ENGLAND

Room 123, 20 Albert Embankment, London, SE1 7TJ (Tel. 01-211 5633)

Chairman: Sir Edmund Compton, GCB; KBE.
Deputy Chairman: J. M. Rankin, QC.
Commission Members: The Countess of Albemarle, DBE; T. C. Benfield; Prof. M. D. J. Chisholm; Sir Andrew Wheatley, CBE; F. B. Young, CBE.
Secretary: David R. Smith.

It is the Commission's function to keep under review the local government areas in England and the electoral arrangements for those areas. The Commission are required to propose to the Secretary of State for the Environment such changes as are allowed by the Act and which appear to them to be desirable in the interest of effective and convenient local government. The Secretary of State may, if he thinks fit by order give effect to any such proposals with or without modification. The changes which the Commission can recommend include alterations to boundaries, the constitution or abolition of a local government area, the conversion of metropolitan areas into non-metropolitan areas and vice versa and proposals for revised patterns of wards and county electoral divisions, the number of councillors to be elected and the name of each electoral area.

At present, the Commission are virtually fully engaged on the initial review of the electoral arrangements for all the new principal local government areas, which the 1972 Act requires shall be undertaken as a matter or urgency, and on an electoral review of the London boroughs. This work should be completed in 1978. The Commission's subsequent programme of work will be settled nearer the time but is likely to include reviews of the 10,000 or so parishes and any urgent reviews of boundaries which do not involve major alterations in the pattern of authorities. These tasks should help to clear the way for the statutory review of counties and metropolitan districts which is due to take place between 1984 and 1989.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

20 Park Cresc., London, W1N 4AL (Tel. 01-636 54221)

The Medical Research Council are responsible, under the aegis of the Secretary of State for Education and Science, for the promotion of medical and allied biological research at a national level.

The Council are financed primarily through a parliamentary grant-in-aid and also carry out research for the Health Departments and the Department of Employment on a "customer-contractor" basis. They are also able, under the terms of their Charter, to receive private gifts or bequests. They maintain the National Institute for Medical Research at Mill Hill, its clinical counterpart the Clinical Research Centre at Northwick Park, and over 60 research units; they also support work in the universities and hospitals and other centres in the United Kingdom and overseas, through their schemes of Research Groups and Research Grants.

The Council are assisted in their work by four advisory boards—the Neurobiology and Mental Health Board, the Cell Biology and Disorders Board, the Physiological Systems and Disorders Board and the Tropical Medicine Research Board. In addition, the Environmental Medicine (Research Policy) Committee advises the Council on policy for the support of research on occupational environmental and social medicine problems. The Council maintain a close liaison with the universities and the Health Departments, and co-operate as necessary with other government departments and local authorities.

NATURAL ENVIRONMENT RESEARCH COUNCIL, THE

Alhambra Hse., 27–33 Charing Cross Road, London, WC2H 0AX (Tel. 01-930 9232)

The Natural Environment Research Council was established by Royal Charter on 1st June 1965, under the Science and Technology Act of 1965. The task of the Council is to encourage, plan and execute research in those sciences, physical, geological and biological, that relate to man's natural environment and its resources. Such investigations seek to provide a better understanding not only of the nature and processes of the environment in which we live and on whose resources we depend, but also of their influence on man's activities and welfare and, of growing importance today, of man's influence on them.

The natural environmental sciences supported by the Council include geology, geophysics and geochemistry; physical oceanography, marine biology and fisheries; hydrology, freshwater biology and fisheries; terrestrial ecology; forestry; and meteorology.

The Council supports the environmental sciences in the universities by awarding post-graduate training awards, research grants and fellowships.

The Council is financed by Grant-in-Aid from Parliament, received through the Department of Education and Science.

The Northern Ireland Office is the office of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. It was established in March, 1972, following the Northern Ireland (Temporary Provisions) Act which transferred to a Secretary of State and the United Kingdom Parliament the legislative and executive powers formerly divested in the Northern Ireland Government and Parliament. The Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973 provided a new framework for devolved government in Northern Ireland through an Assembly and Executive and a wide range of legislative and executive powers were transferred to them on January 1st, 1974. Since the fall of the Executive in May 1974, responsibility for the government of Northern Ireland has rested with the United Kingdom Government. The Northern Ireland Act 1974 made inter alia better temporary arrangements for the government of Northern Ireland, exercised through the Secretary of State.

POPULATION CENSUSES AND SURVEYS, OFFICE OF

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, St. Catherines Hse., 10 Kingsway, London, WC2B 6JP (Tel. 01-242 0262, Ext. 2128)

National Health Service Central Register, Smedley Hydro, Birkdale, Southport, Lancs., PR8 2HH (Tel. 0704 69824)

Statistical and Census Office, Segensworth Road, Titchfield, Fareham, Hants. (Tel. 032-94 42511).

The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys was created by the merger in May 1970 of the General Register Office and the Government Social Survey Department.

The first Registrar General was appointed in 1836, and the General Register Office was established in 1837 when a comprehensive system of civil registration of births, marriages and deaths was instituted.

The Registrar General controls the local registration service in England and Wales in the exercise of its registration and marriage duties in accordance with the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953, the Registration Service Act 1953, the Family Law Reform Act 1969, the Marriage Acts 1949 to 1970 and other relevant enactments.

Copies of the original registrations of births, still-births, marriages and deaths are kept in London. A register of adopted children is held at Titchfield. Central indexes are compiled quarterly and certified copies of entries may be obtained on payment of certain fees. Extensive use of the records is made by other Government Departments, for the verification of ages and other particulars, e.g. in connection with pensions and national insurance.

Since 1841 the Registrar General has been responsible for taking the census of population. He also prepares and publishes a wide range of statistics and appropriate commentary relating to population, fertility, births, still-births, marriages, deaths and cause of death, infectious diseases, sickness and injuries.

The Registrar General also maintains at Southport a central register of persons on doctors' lists, for the purposes of the National Health Service.

The Social Survey Division carries out survey research studies on behalf of Government departments concerned with social and economic problems. These are of two kinds: (a) continuing studies designed to provide serial statistical data for those concerns of Government which require them and (b) ad hoc studies designed to meet particular policy needs.

PRICES AND CONSUMER PROTECTION, DEPARTMENT OF

1 Victoria St., London, SW1H 0ET (Tel. 01-215 7877; Telex 27366; Answer Back DT1HQ LONDON)

The Department of Prices and Consumer Protection was set up in March 1974, under a Secretary of State, and took over responsibility from the former Department of Trade and Industry for policy on prices and consumer affairs, and from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for policy on food prices.

Prices

The Department is the focal point for measures to deal with the generality of prices questions. It sponsors the Price Commission and has the principal responsibility for policy over the whole range of retail prices, including food prices, except for those of the nationalized industries. It has overall responsibility for policy on food subsidies, though other Departments undertake the detailed administration.

Consumer Protection

The Department deals with consumer affairs generally and is responsible for policy on fair trading, home and consumer safety, consumer credit, standards, weights and measures including metrication and for monopolies, mergers and restrictive practices. The Director General of Fair Trading is appointed by the Secretary of State.

Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection: Rt. Hon. Roy Hattersley, MP.
Minister of State for Prices and Consumer Protection: John Fraser, MP.
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State: Robert Maclennan, MP.

PUBLIC HEALTH LABORATORY SERVICE BOARD

Headquarters Office, Colindale Av., London, NW9 5EQ (Tel. 01-205 1295)

The Public Health Laboratory Service had its origins in the emergency service which was set up in 1939 to provide adequate bacteriological and epidemiological facilities in the event of war; it was given statutory basis by Section 17 of the National Health Service Act 1946. The aim of the Service is primarily to assist medical officers of health in the diagnosis, prevention and control of infectious disease, and to this end it undertakes laboratory and field investigations covering material of both human and non-human origin without charge to the local authority, providing a continuous picture of the communicable microbial diseases of the country. It provides a bacteriological service for hospitals in some areas under special arrangements.

The Service is now administered by the Public Health Laboratory Service Board, established by the Public Health Laboratory Service Act 1960, which came into force on 1st August 1961. The Administrative Headquarters of the Board is at Headquarters Office, Colindale Av., London, NW9 5EQ. The main Central Public Health Laboratory, incorporating most of the special Reference laboratories, is situated at Colindale, London, NW9. There are Regional laboratories at Birmingham, Bristol, Cambridge, Cardiff, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Oxford, Portsmouth and Sheffield and Area laboratories at Bath, Brighton, Carlisle, Chelmsford, Chester, Coventry, Derby, Dorchester, Epsom, Exeter, Gloucester, Guildford, Hereford, Hull, Ipswich, Leicester, Lincoln, London (Central Middlesex Hospital), London (Dulwich Hospital), London (St George's Hospital, Tooting), London (Whipps, Cross Hospital, Leytonstone), Luton, Maidstone, Middlesbrough, Norwich, Nottingham, Peterborough, Plymouth, Poole, Preston, Reading, Salisbury, Shrewsbury, Southampton, Stoke on Trent, Taunton, Watford, Wolverhampton, Worcester, Carmarthen, Conway, Newport (Gwent) and Swansea. ROYAL FINE ART COMMISSION

2 Carlton Gdns., London, SW1Y 5AA (Tel. 01-930 3935)

Appointed by Warrant under His Majesty's Royal Sign Manual in May 1924—"to inquire into such questions of public amenity or of artistic importance as may be referred to them from time to time by any of our Departments of State, and to report thereon to such Department; and furthermore to give advice on similar questions when so requested by public or quasi-public bodies, where it appears to the said Commission that their assistance would be advantageous; . . ."

In August 1933, a Royal Warrant extended the Terms of Reference of the Commission — "So that it shall also be open to the said Commission, if they so desire, to call the attention of any of Our Departments of State, or of the appropriate public or quasi public bodies, to any project or development which in the opinion of the said Commission may appear to affect amenities of a national or public character; . . ."

In May 1946, the powers and membership of the Commission were enlarged by Royal Warrant. The Commissioners were given "full power to call before them such persons as they shall judge likely to afford them any information upon the subject of the said Commission; and also to call for, have access to, and examine all such books, documents, registers and records as may afford them the fullest information on the subject, and to inquire of and concerning the premises by all other lawful ways and means whatsoever". The Commissioners, or any three of them, were also authorized and empowered "to visit and personally inspect such places as they may deem it expedient so to inspect for the more effectual carrying out of the purposes aforesaid".

Reports on the work of the Commission are published from time to time by HMSO.

TRADE, DEPARTMENT OF

1 Victoria St., London, SW1H 0ET (Tel. 01 215 7877; Telex 811074 DTIHQ G)

Overseas Trade

The Department is responsible for commercial policy and relations with overseas countries and is concerned with economic policies affecting the international position of the United Kingdom. It promotes United Kingdom commercial interests overseas, negotiates on trade and commercial matters, and administers United Kingdom protective tariffs. Under the direction of the British Overseas Trade Board, which was set up in January 1972, and has the Secretary of State for Trade as President, the Department promotes British exports, providing an export information service to industry and commerce, largely through the eight regional offices, and handling Government support for overseas trade fairs. The Export Credits Guarantee Department is a separate Department responsible to the Secretary of State for Trade, providing a credit insurance facility, and guaranteeing finance, for exported goods and services.

Shipping and Civil Aviation

The Department is the sponsor for the United Kingdom shipping and civil aviation industries including the conduct of international negotiations. It is also responsible for the regulation of marine safety.

The Department sponsors the British Airways Board, the British Airports Authority and the Civil Aviation Authority, and approves the capital investment of these bodies. In addition, the Department issues policy guidance to the Civil Aviation Authority and administers the Authority's annual grant until such time as full recovery of costs is attained.

Commerce and Industry

The Department is responsible in general for the basic legal framework for the regulation of industrial and commercial enterprises, administering a number of statutes governing company affairs and insolvency. It also holds general responsibility for company law, patent, trade mark and copyright matters, and for all matters affecting insurance. The Department of Trade is also the sponsor Department for tourism and the hotel and travel industries; the newspaper, printing and publishing industries; the film industry and the distributive and service trades.

TREASURY, THE

Parliament St., London, SW1P 3AG (Tel. 01-233 3000)

The Office of the Lord High Treasurer has been continuously in commission for well over 200 years; the Lord High Commissioners of HM Treasury consist of the First Lord of the Treasury (who is also the Prime Minister), the Chancellor of the Exchequer and five Junior Lords. This Board of Commissioners is assisted at present by the Chief Secretary, a Parliamentary Secretary who is the Chief Whip, a Financial Secretary, a Minister of State (who are also members of the Government) and by the Permanent Secretary. The Prime Minister and First Lord is not primarily concerned in the day to day aspects of Treasury business. The Parliamentary Secretary and the Junior Lords are Government Whips in the House of Commons. The management of the Treasury devolves upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer and, under him, the Chief Secretary, the Financial Secretary and the Minister of State. The Chief Secretary with the assistance of the Financial Secretary is responsible for the control of public expenditure and EEC Affairs. The Financial Secretary also discharges the traditional responsibility of the Treasury for the largely formal procedure for the voting of funds by Parliament. The Minister of State deals with Home Finance. All Treasury Ministers are concerned in tax matters.

THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOUNDARY COMMISSION FOR WALES

Queens Ct., Plymouth St., Cardiff, CF1 4DA (Cardiff 395031)

FUNCTIONS

The Welsh Commission was set up under the Local Government Act 1972 to keep under review the areas and electoral arrangements of local government in Wales. The Commission are a permanent body and required initially to undertake a "Special Community Review" of the whole of Wales for the purpose of recommending to the Secretary of State for Wales a pattern of communities for each district created by the 1972 Act (including the 6 excepted boroughs) and, to the Home Secretary a system of electoral arrangements for those communities which are to have community councils. The Commission are also conducting a review of certain district and district/county boundaries, where there are said to be serious anomalies, with a view to recommending a new boundary line. The electoral arrangements in each district and each county will be undertaken by the Commission as tasks 2 and 3 respectively.

Chairman: Ronald Waterhouse, QC.
Deputy Chairman: Michael Gibbon, QC.
Other Members: William Coleman, JP; Dr. Elwyn Davies, MA, LLD; Mrs. Winifred Mathias, CBE, JP.
Secretary: D. T. M. Davies.
Assistant Secretary: J. Ifor Davies.

SECTION 32

COUNTY COUNCILS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

COUNTY COUNCILS

The Local Government Act 1972 abolished from 1st April, 1974 the 45 and 13 county councils in England and Wales respectively and created:

6 Metropolitan County Councils	in England
39 Non-Metropolitan County Councils
8 Non-Metropolitan County Councils	in Wales

The metropolitan county councils of Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, West Midlands and West Yorkshire are centred on densely populated areas and bear a resemblance to the Greater London Council.

The boundaries of many of the non-metropolitan counties in England are virtually the same as those of the counties they replace but the following major changes are effected by the creation of new counties:

Avon—consisting of the City of Bristol and parts of the counties of Somerset and Gloucestershire.

Cambridgeshire—a merging of the counties of Cambridgeshire & Isle of Ely and Huntingdonshire & Peterborough.

Cleveland—consisting of the county boroughs of Hartlepool and Teesside and parts of the counties of Durham and the North Riding of Yorkshire.

Cumbria—a merging of Cumberland and Westmorland.

Hereford and Worcester—a merging without change of name.

Humberside—consisting of the county boroughs of Grimsby and Kingston upon Hull and parts of the counties of the East and West Ridings of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire (parts of Lindsey).

Leicestershire—a merging of Leicestershire and Rutland.

Lincolnshire—a merging of the three administrative parts of Holland, Kesteven and Lindsey (less that part transferred to Humberside).

North Yorkshire—consisting of parts of the North and West Ridings.

Suffolk—a merging of East and West Suffolk.

In Wales, Glamorgan is divided into three counties and the other five new counties were formed as a result of mergers among the remaining twelve.

County councils will consist of a chairman and councillors. A county is to be divided into electoral divisions, each after 1977 returning one councillor elected in accordance with the Local Government Act 1972 and the Representation of the People Act 1949. The term of office of county councillors is four years, all retiring together on the fourth day after election day for county councillors.

The first election to the new county councils took place on 12th April, 1973 and the next will be held on 5th May, 1977 in and after which newly elected county councillors will come into office on the day their predecessors retire.

The principal functions of county councils may be summarized as follows:

Metropolitan County Councils

Strategic Planning
National Park and Countryside functions
Traffic and Transportation functions
Passenger Transport Authority
Highways
Caravan sites
Housing (Reserve Powers)
Police
Fire Service
Food and Drugs Act 1955-Sec 2

Weights and Measures
Museums and Art Galleries
Refuse disposal

Non-Metropolitan County Councils

Strategic Planning
National Park and Countryside functions
Traffic and Transportation functions
Highways
Caravan sites
Education
Housing (Reserve Powers)
Social Services
Police
Fire Service
Food and Drugs Act 1955-Sec 2
Weights and Measures
Public Libraries, Museums and Art Galleries
Refuse disposal

The Act of 1972 sections 101–2 gives authority to a county council to arrange for district councils within its area to undertake county council functions on an agency basis, excepting Education, Social Services, Police and Fire. Circular 131/72 (DOE) mentions five areas "most likely" for consideration for agency arrangements (Highways/Planning/Refuse Disposal/Consumer Protection/Libraries).

THE ASSOCIATION OF COUNTY COUNCILS

This is an Association of County Councils in England and Wales for purposes set out under "Objects" below. It was formed in July 1973 after the setting up of new County Councils under the Local Government Act, 1972.

CONSTITUTION

Membership of the Association is open to County Councils in England and Wales and to the Greater London Council (including the Inner London Education Authority). At present (April, 1976) all 47 non-metropolitan County Councils in England and Wales are members of the Association.

OBJECTS

The objects of the Association are to promote and protect the interests of member councils and of local government in general; to initiate consideration of and to take action on matters of concern to member councils generally; to disseminate information to member councils in relation to any subjects of interest to them; and to aim at the setting up of a single organization to speak for and represent local government in England and Wales.

The Association operates through the Executive Council and the following Committees:
Agriculture, Consumer Services, Education, Fire and Emergency Planning, Local Government Finance, National Parks, Planning and Transportation, Police, Policy, Recreation, Social Services, Selection.

OFFICES

The Offices of the Association are at Eaton House, 66a Eaton Square, Westminster, London, SW1W 9BH. Tel: 01-235 5173.

President: The Hon. The Viscount Amory, KG, PC, GCMG, TD, DL. Secretary: A. C. Hetherington, CBE. Deputy Secretary: W. D. Partridge. Education Officer: L. W. K. Brown, CBE.

WELSH COUNTIES COMMITTEE

Chairman: Coun. T. Jones, FRICS, FRVA, Godre'r Aran, Llanuwchllyn, Bala, LL23 7UB.
Vice-Chairman: Coun. J. E. Brooks, 57 Janet St., Splott, Cardiff, CF2 2BE.
Secretary: T. M. Haydn Rees, CBE, DL, Shire Hall, Mold, Clwyd, CH7 6NB.

This is a Committee comprising representatives of the eight County Councils in Wales. It was established in 1973 for the purposes set out in the objects below after the setting up of the new County Councils under the Local Government Act 1972, and succeeded a previous Committee of the same name.

CONSTITUTION

Membership of the Committee is open to County Councils in the Principality, all of whom are in current membership. Representatives are those elected members of County Councils in Wales serving on the Association of County Councils, with the addition of one extra representative from each County. Chief Executives of the County Councils are entitled to attend and take part in meetings, together with such other chief officers as may be invited from time to time for special purposes, but without the power of voting.

OBJECTS

The Objects of the Committee are to maintain close co-operation between County Councils in Wales to their mutual advantage; to deal directly, in respect of matters arising which are exclusively or mainly the particular interest of Wales, with the Secretary of State for Wales or Ministers of other Government Departments, and to be available for consultation by such Departments as and when desired; to liaise with the Association of County Councils and to put forward the collective Welsh view point at meetings of the Association including the recording of a dissenting view if appropriate; to scrutinize legislation or other provisions which may have a particular effect on Wales and to disseminate information on subjects of interest.

ASSOCIATION OF METROPOLITAN AUTHORITIES

Chairman: Sir Robert Thomas, DL, JP (Greater Manchester CC); Secretary: T. H. Caulcott, 36 Old Queen St., London, SW1H 9JE (01-930 9861).

CONSTITUTION

The Association has in membership all the authorities eleigible for membership, i.e.:

(i) the Greater London Council (including the Inner London Education Authority);
(ii) the London borough councils which, for the purpose of this constitution, include the Corporation of the City of London;
(iii) the metropolitan county councils;
(iv) the metropolitan district councils.

OBJECTS

The objects of the Association are:

(1) To watch over, protect and promote the interests, rights, powers and duties of its member authorities as they may be affected by legislation or proposed legislation or otherwise.
(2) To provide a forum for the discussion of matters of common concern to its member authorities and a means by which joint views may be formulated and expressed, particularly in negotiations with Government departments.
(3) To provide (in conjunction, where appropriate, with the other local authority Associations) such central services for its member authorities as it may consider to be appropriate.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Reading.

The administrative county of Berkshire, except the areas in Oxfordshire.

In the administrative county of Buckingham—the boroughh of Slough;
  the urban district of Eton;
  In the rural district of Eton, the parishes of Datchet, Horton and Wraysbury, the Britwell ward of the parish of Burnham and part of the parish of Wexham.

The Local Government Act of 1972 has consiiderably changed Berkshire's boundaries, with North Berkshire transferring to Oxfordshire and Slough and Eton joining the new county from Buckinghamshire. The County Borough of Reading also joins the new Berkshire. The new county, however, remains dominated by the River Thames which has contributed so much to its history. Its county town, Reading, has always been a centre of communications and no doubt Berkshire's central situation in the South accounts for its varied development.

Although there is some evidence of prehisstoric and Roman settlements in the county it was the Norman Conquest and the Reformation which were to influence Berkshire's future most. William the Conqueror began work on Windsor Castle and so established a "royal" connection in the county. Trade and commerce having flourished in the Middle Ages, the sale of monastery land in the 16th century brought about an increase in agriculture.

The Berkshire countryside provides rich arable and dairy farming land, but the industrial growth of Reading, the designation of Bracknell as a New Town and the inclusion of Slough within its boundaries, now provide the county with a diversity of light industry. However, in the West particularly, Berkshire remains essentially a farming area and towns like Newbury and Hungerford continue to prosper, serving an agricultural community, as well as providing homes for people working in Reading and beyond.

The development of major road schemes, and of course the completion of the M4 between London and South Wales, have contributed greatly to improving communication links, both within Berkshire and with the rest of the country.

Outdoor activities and river-sports naturally dominate the leisure and social lives of those who live in Berkshire and a number of Sports and Community Centres has been provided. The River Thames, of course, attracts many holidaymakers and boating enthusiasts and the superb countryside offers excellent opportunities for horse-riders and golfers. Other attractions include Ascot, Newbury and Windsor race courses. Berkshire also offers a number of towns and villages of historical interest, many good restaurants and, of course, Windsor Castle.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
The county boroughs of Chester and Warrington.
The administrative county of Chester, except the areas in Derbyshire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside.
In the administrative county of Lancaster—
  the borough of Widnes;
  in the urban district of Golborne, the wards of Culcheth and Newchurch;
  the rural district of Warrington;
  in the rural district of Whiston, the parish of Hale and so much of the parish of Bold as lies within the designated area of Warrington New Town.

Prior to local government reorganization, Cheshire's boundaries had remained substantially unchanged since Domesday.

In 1974, the shape, size and character of the county were all substantially changed. Large areas, largely urbanized, were surrendered to the new Merseyside County Council (in north Wirral), and to Greater Manchester County (around the southern fringe of the conurbation); Tintwhistle in the north-east passed to Derbyshire. Cheshire received in return the two county boroughs of Chester and Warrington, together with Widnes, the rural district of Warrington and part of the Golborne Urban District—all, like Warrington County Borough, formerly in Lancashire.

The result is a more compact county with no part more than about an hour's journey by road (mostly by Cheshire's excellent motorway system). While marginally smaller in population, it is expected that new Cheshire will reach a million again during the 1980s.

Above all, new Cheshire is socially and economically well balanced. Now that the whole of the Mersey belt of heavily industrialized towns (including the New Towns of Runcorn and Warrington which continue to expand rapidly) between Merseyside and Manchester on both sides of the Manchester Ship Canal is within one county, there are great opportunities for environmental experiment and improvement to match the industrial investment and employment of the area. The brine deposits which have been so important to mid-Cheshire for centuries are a national asset, and their products are processed by the heavy chemical industry in the Mersey belt. Similarly the County deposits of building and silica sand are vital to the construction and foundry industries.

A more recent development is the proliferation of major research establishments which read like a roll-call of Britain's largest industries ranging from the Daresbury Nuclear Physics Laboratory to the Shell Research Centre at Thornton. Dispersal of large office complexes from the South-East has brought important divisions of Barclays Bank to Knutsford and other similar moves are occurring.

Agriculture (especially Dairy farming) remains important of course, and contributes to the variety of Cheshire's landscape which ranges from the gritstone of the Pennines east of Macclesfield (part of the Peak District National Park) to the rolling plains of North and South Cheshire with their striking sandstone escarpments at Alderley Edge, Helsby and Broxton. This natural beauty is enhanced by Cheshire's proximity to other National Parks in Snowdonia and the Lake District, and to the Welsh coastline.

Though there is a widely held belief that Cheshire is a dormitory for adjoining conurbations, it is estimated that 75% of Cheshire's working population are employed within its boundaries: and the county has a remarkable independence of surrounding areas for employment opportunities.

Administratively, new Cheshire is divided into eight districts.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April, 1974:
The county borough of Derby.
The administrative county of Derbyshire.
In the administrative county of Chester, the rural district of Tintwistle.

It is not only Derbyshire's scenery which provides so much contrast but its industry too alters markedly from district to district. Much of the north-west forms part of England's first National Park, the Peak Park, and tourism is a key industry.

Apart from the villages and towns in the National Park, towns near its border such as Buxton and Matlock are popular tourist centres and able to offer their own attractions. At Buxton there is the renowned Crescent, built by John Carr of York for the Fifth Duke of Devonshire between 1780 and 1784.

Derbyshire maintains many ancient customs and traditions, probably the most famous of which is well dressing, which is peculiar to the county. Its origins are unknown, possibly pagan, but later adopted by Christianity as an act of thanksgiving for plentiful water supplies.

Apart from tourism, farming is a leading industry, and in its various forms is important in most parts of the county. Dairy farming tends to predominate over crop farming. On a picturesque showground adjoining the River Wye at Bakewell the staging of the largest one-day agricultural show in the country takes place. The annual County Agricultural Show is held near Derby at Elvaston.

Derbyshire has been the scene of many important industrial advances. Two hundred years ago Sir Richard Arkwright opened the world's first successful water-powered cotton spinning mill on the banks of the River Derwent at Cromford, near Matlock. The mill, which represented one of the most important steps of the Industrial Revolution, still stands and is now a dye works.

Quarrying too is a long-established industry which like other industries relying on mineral wealth, makes an important contribution to the county's economy.

Many buildings in Derbyshire are, not unnaturally, constructed from local stone including some of the fine country houses. In fact, a number of Derbyshire country houses enjoy international fame and possibly none more so than Chatsworth, country seat of the Duke of Devonshire. Nearby is Haddon Hall, perhaps the most complete and authentic example of a medieval manor in England. In east Derbyshire Hardwick Hall was built in the late 16th century and there is a fine 17th-century Castle at Bolsover. Nearby Sutton Scarsdale Hall, sadly falling into ruin for the past 50 years, is now to have its finest features preserved.

Also in the north-east is the smaller Barlborough Hall, a fine example of Elizabethan architecture and now a Catholic Boys' School. Melbourne Hall, south of Derby, is another house in a beautiful setting rich in period furniture and art treasures as is Kedleston Hall, a Georgian home designed partly by Robert Adam.

In Creswell Crags in the north-east is one of the two earliest known settlements of man in the British isles. Stone circles survive at Stanton Moor, Arbor Low and on Harthill Moor, where there are traces of an Iron-Age fort.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The administrative county of Devon.The county boroughs of Exeter, Plymouth and Torbay.

Devon is one of the biggest counties in Britain. In area it is the third largest county in England and Wales and has the greatest length of roadway—13,128 kilometres.

Devon is bordered on the east by Somerset and Dorset and on the west by Cornwall. Its steep and rugged north coast meets the Bristol Channel; the more sheltered beaches and ports of the south coast face the English Channel. The county town is Exeter, where the County Council has its headquarters.

The naval history of Devon is legendary. Drake, Gilbert, Raleigh and Frobisher are among the county's great Elizabethan seamen. The tradition continues at Plymouth where the Royal Navy still operates a large base.

The county has two national parks, Dartmoor and Exmoor (partly in Somerset), and its fine beaches and attractive thatched villages help make it the most popular holiday area in Britain. Tourism and agriculture are its main sources of income.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Bournemouth.
The administrative county of Dorset.
In the administrative county of Hampshire—the borough of Christchurch;
  in the rural district of Ringwood and Fordingbridge, the parishes of Hurn and St. Leonards and St. Ives, parts of the parishes of Christchurch East and Sopley.

Dorset comprises some of the most attractive landscapes in Britain. Most of West Dorset and the Purbeck area have been designated Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty. There are four National Nature Reserves at Arne, Hartland Moor, Morden Bog and Studland Heath, together with numerous sites of special scientific interest.

Topography is varied, ranging from the Chalk Downs covering most of Central/North East Dorset, the Jurassics of West and South Dorset and the Tertiaries of the Hampshire Basin, in the east of the county. There are several unique geological features, particularly along the interesting coastline, most notably at Chesil beach and Lulworth Cove.

There are many historic features of interest in Dorset. The Chalk Downs in particular are a rich source of pre-Christian archaeological features in the form of earthworks, tumuli and forts, the most famous being Maiden Castle near Dorchester and Badbury Rings near Blandford.

There are also many historic towns, e.g. Blandford, Sherborne, Lyme Regis and Dorchester.

Dorset's economy is based principally on agriculture, quarrying and consumer services. Manufacturing industry is predominantly small in scale, though Poole in recent years has attracted certain growth industries. Tourism is the largest industry, based on the county's rich landscape and attractive coastal resorts of Swanage, Weymouth, Bridport and Lyme Regis. There are also several large defence establishments at Bovington, East Lulworth and Portland, together with the Atomic Energy Establishment at Winfrith, which contribute significantly to the local economy. Extractive industries are also important in certain locations, the principal extractions being sand and gravel, ball clay and Portland and Purbeck stones.

As regards amenities, several are of national significance, such as the village of Milton Abbas, Abbotsbury Swannery, Compton Acres Gardens, Poole, Corfe Castle, Brownsea Island, Portland Bill and Lulworth Cove.

Historic buildings—Athelhampton House, Sherborne Castle, Kingston Lacey House.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
The county borough of Darlington.
The administrative county of Durham, except the areas in Cleveland and Tyne and Wear.
In the administrative county of Yorkshire, North Riding, the rural district of Startforth.

The county of Durham is bounded on the west side by the High Pennines which form the boundary with the county of Cumbria, to the north by the River Derwent and the county of Tyne and Wear and to the south by the counties of North Yorkshire and Cleveland.

The southern part of the county is mostly rural in character (with hill farming in the west), except for the industrial area around Teesside. The northern part of the county has two distinct features: to the west it is mostly rural and hill-farming country, while to the east it is mainly urban in character. The east side of the county which borders on the North Sea is chiefly a coal-mining area.

Durham City, the administrative centre, has a Norman Cathedral and Castle and there are several other medieval castles in the county, notably Barnard Castle, Raby Castle and Lumley Castle.

Mining was formerly the main industry in the county but is now in decline. Other industries are iron and steel and chemicals and recently the trend has been towards the creation of light industrial estates.

Durham has much attractive scenery, especially in Weardale, Teesdale and the Valley of the Derwent which extend into the High Pennines.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The County comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Southend-on-Sea.
The administrative county of Essex.

Essex is one of the most rapidly expanding counties, where historic towns thrive alongside modern communities, such as the two new towns. One of the main reasons for this growth, both residential and industrial, is its ease of access to London. It is an important gateway to the Continent through the ports of Tilbury and Harwich and Parkeston and Southend and Stansted Airports. The ever-growing Tilbury docks handle trade with all parts of the world. Most of the industrial activity in Essex is centred on the Thames but modern industries of many kinds can be found in or near the towns elsewhere in the county, with the more traditional industries and crafts in the rural areas.

In contrast to industrial Thames-side, Essex is one of the main cereal-growing areas in England and fruit-growing, market gardening and sugar beet cultivation are other important agricultural activities. The oyster farms—of historic significance—cockling and other inshore fishing still yield valuable 'crops' along the creeks and estuaries.

Essex is also a holiday county, with its seaside resorts of which the largest is Southend-on-Sea, and riverside towns many of which have developed as yachting centres to meet the growing popularity of this form of recreation. Inland there are the attractions of Epping and Hatfield Forests in the west and the quiet countryside which extends across the county, with its many unspoilt villages and historic towns, to the Constable Country on the Suffolk border.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Gloucester.
The administrative county of Gloucestershire, except the areas in Avon.

Gloucestershire is divided into six Districts (Gloucester, Cheltenham, Tewkesbury, Stroud, Cotswold and Forest of Dean) and 255 civil parishes. The principal urban areas are at Gloucester, Cheltenham, Stroud and Cirencester having populations of approximately 90,000, 86,150, 19,600 and 14,500 respectively.

The 1974 Report of the South West Economic Planning Council entitled "A Strategic Settlement Pattern for the South West" recommends that Gloucestershire should plan to cope with about 120,000 more people by the year 2,001. The main concentration of this increase (approximately 80%) will centre on Gloucester and Cheltenham.

The County has a well balanced range of industries and employment. The historic impetus of natural resources, wool in the Cotswolds and timber, iron ore and coal in the Forest of Dean, provided a basic industrial structure and, although the associated industries have declined in post-war years, the admirable communications network of railways and the M.5 Motorway from Birmingham to Exeter, with a link to the M.50 Motorway at Strensham, which provides speedy connections with most parts of the country, has stimulated new industrial development. Much of this has taken place in Gloucester and Cheltenham and has included not only the manufacturing and processing of such commodities as ice-cream and nylon fibres, but the administrative headquarters of national companies, the Countryside Commission and the Central Electricity Generating Board. Numerous smaller industries, particularly those in the light engineering servicing and distributive trades, have also been attracted to the county and existing pressures for further expansion of trade and industry are high. The county still displays much of its old farming character, especially on some of the magnificent parkland estates, but economic pressures have resulted in changes to modern methods of farming.

The county town is the most inland port in Great Britain, being linked to Sharpness (which is the nearest large docks to the industrial Midlands) by the Gloucester and Berkeley Ship Canal which is 16½ miles long. It helps to facilitate the transit of goods and materials both within this country and abroad as well as within the County.

The greater regard for conservation is everywhere evident and midst all the changes the county retains the inherent beauty that has made it famous as a tourist and holiday attraction, both the Forest of Dean and the Cotswolds containing expansive areas of great landscape value.

Tameside—Boroughs of Dukinfield, Hyde, Stalybridge, Ashton-under-Lyne and Mossley; Longendale, Audenshaw, Denton and Droylsden Urban Districts.—Ac., 25,510; Pop., 223,130.

Greater Manchester is one of the major conurbations of the country and the largest in the North West. Some, 2,700,000 people live in the 500 square miles of the County. As a metropolitan county Greater Manchester is second to West Yorkshire in area and second to West Midlands in population.

The traditional industries of the county have been coalmining and cotton manufacture but the industrial structure has been transformed in the last two decades. The old industries have now given way to light engineering, transport and warehousing, although the old crafts and skills are still very much in evidence. In the centre of the county the regional offices of government departments have been joined by the national and regional headquarters of major banks, insurance companies and building societies. Major shipping projects have been completed throughout the county with the centre of the City of Manchester now witnessing the development of one of the largest covered shopping areas in the whole of Europe.

Greater Manchester is busy and thriving as is evident from the skyscrapers and industrial estates growing everywhere in the county. Manchester International Airport is used by some 3,000,000 passengers a year: its freight traffic is growing appreciably. The Port of Manchester has its terminal docks in the county which take cargo to and from all over the world. There are two liner train depots at the heart of the railway system: for rail passengers London is but 155 minutes from Manchester. All parts of the county are connected by the urban motorway system to the national network—M6, M56, M61, M62.

The creation of the Greater Manchester County

Council gives the conurbation its first opportunity to project a single and comprehensive image of the area. The county council and the ten districts within the county are the successors to some 70 local authorities previously providing services in the area. From 1st April 1974, the county council is facing up to responsibilities which the Local Government Act 1972 has placed on metropolitan counties, responsibilities for the structure plan, for transportation and major highways, for public protection such as police, fire services and consumer advice. By itself and in association with the districts, the county council gives support to the arts and recreation. The county council is looking forward to the challenge of the future.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
The county borough of Newport.
The administrative county of Monmouthshire except the parts to be comprised in the counties of Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan.
In the administrative county of Brecon:
  the urban district of Brynmawr;
  in the rural district of Crickhowell, the parish of Llanelli.

The new county of Gwent is among the richest and most heavily populated counties in Wales, containing about 440,100 people in an area of approximately 340,000 acres. The largest towns are Newport (108,300), Pontypool (36,500) and Cwmbran (33,500)—the first new town in Wales and the administrative centre of the new authority.

Although only a comparatively small county, few areas in Britain have such a variety of history, culture and countryside. Physically it is a county with markedly different landscape types and a full share of natural beauty. In the centre and east is the Plain of Gwent, an area of undulating relief containing 59 square miles of the Brecon Beacons National Park, the Wye Valley area of outstanding natural beauty and some proposed country parks. In the west is the highland area with deep valleys separated by plateaux, some rising up to 1,750 feet, while in sharp contrast the Gwent Moors skirting the River Severn in the south of the county rises only a few feet above sea level.

Gwent is the gateway to South Wales, its important strategic position evidenced by a long turbulent history. The Romans built their western military headquarters at Caerleon and a civil settlement at Caerwent. The eastern areas, especially the Monnow and Wye Valleys, and the southern margins of the county, in particular, reflect the influence of the Norman occupation. This is most clearly seen in the settlement forms, in such castles as Chepstow, Monmouth, Grosmont, Skenfrith, White Castle and Raglan, in the abbeys of Tintern and Llanthony, in manor farms, and in ancient field and tenurial arrangements. Apart from a limited number of Anglo-Norman Settlements over three-quarters of the county was and has remained Welsh.
